Poetry.

To Her Royal Highness the Princess Alice Maud Mary, on her Marriage.

As the silver-tinted light,
As the dawn all rosy bright,
Streams from out the pall of night,
With the dawning hues of day,
Chasing gloomy clouds away;

So this morn salutes our eyes,
Bow of promise in the skies,
Sign that to our pray'r replies;
And a soft assuaging calm
Soothes our pain like healing balm.

Past the time of solitude;
Joy reviving hope renew'd.
Hence the path with roses strew'd.
Daughter of proud Albion's queen,
Princess of the pensive mien,

Young, heroic, gentle, wise
Of the mind that self denies;
Prompt to succour, sympathise,
And, with sweetest harmony,
Winning—binding—hearts to thee!

On this bright, auspicious day
Shall we not meet homage pay,
Loving half thee—loyal pray
Heaven to crown thy length'ning years
With the peace that life endears?

Shall we silent turn aside
At the coming of the bride—
Curb our gladness, veil our pride?
No, oh no, it may not be!
British hearts will come to thee,

Fond, tumultuous, undeterr'd,
In their deep recesses stirr'd;
And a people's voice be heard,
As an angel's clear and grand,
Blessing thee throughout the land.

Blessing, as thy mother may
Bless thee on this happy day,
When chill tears are charm'd away,
And the glories of her smile
Kindle hope and joy the while.

With thy pure and earnest mien,
Why thy courage so serene,
Strength and comfort thou hast seen,
Worthy of thy sire, indeed,
In the time of better need.

Daughter, whom a mother's heart
Feels her life's better part,
Child belov'd! let these not art
Never, dearer on the day
When we give the bride away!

Bright with hope, the hour is nigh
Lifting up their souls on high,
England's loving millions cry
Lord! accept a people's prayer
Bless, O bless the Royal pair!

Give them the fruits of peace,
Every precious gift increase,
May thy bounties never cease;
Perfect Thou their happiness— [bless!
Watch them, guard them, guide them,

L'ENVOI.

May the Summer breezes free,
With the waves' wild minstrelsy,
Softly, sweetly, unto thee,
Princess, fondest greetings bear,
Breathing low the nation's prayer.

ELISABETH SHERIDAN CAREY.

Marriage of the Princess Alice.

(From the Court Circular.)

Osborne, Tuesday, July 1.

The marriage of her Royal Highness Princess Alice with Prince Louis of Hesse took place this day privately at Osborne, the ceremony being performed by the Archbishop of York, in the unavoidable absence of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Her Majesty the Queen, suffering under the recent severe affliction, attended in a most private manner in a deep mourning, surrounded by her four sons—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, Prince Arthur and Prince Leopold.

The ceremonial of the marriage of her Royal Highness the Princess Alice Maud Mary, second daughter of her Majesty Queen Victoria, and of his Royal Highness Albert, the Prince Consort, Duke of Saxony and Prince of Saxe Coburg and Gotha, with his Grand Ducal Highness the Prince Frederic William Louis, eldest son of his Grand Ducal Highness the Prince Charles William Louis, brother of the Grand Duke of Hesse, was as follows:—The royal personages and others invited were conducted to their places by the Lord Chamberlain and the Vice-Chamberlain. The Queen, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, the Prince Alfred, the Prince Arthur, and the Prince Leopold, and attended by her Grace the Duchess of Wellington, mistress of the robes, and by her Grace the Duches of Athol, lady-in-waiting, was previously conducted from her Majesty's apartments by the Lord Chamberlain to a chair on the left side of the altar. When the Queen was seated and the royal personages and other guests had taken their places, the Lord Chamberlain conducted the bridegroom to his place on the right side of the altar. His Grand Ducal Highness the bridegroom was supported by his brother, his Grand Ducal Highness the Prince Henry of Hesse. The Lord Chamberlain then proceeded to her Majesty's apartments, and conducted the bride from thence to her place on the left side of the altar. Her Royal Highness the bride was supported by her uncle, his Royal Highness the reigning Duke of Saxe Coburg and Gotha, and was accompanied by her Royal Highness's sisters, their Royal Highnesses the Princess Helena, the Princess Louise, and the Princess Beatrice, and by her Grand Ducal Highness the Princess Anna of Hesse, sister of his Grand Ducal Highness the Bridegroom, as bridesmaids. The parents of the bridegroom were placed opposite to the Queen. When the bride had taken her place the service commenced, which was performed by his Grace the Archbishop of York. The bride was given away by her uncle, his Royal Highness the reigning Duke of Saxe Coburg and Gotha.

At the conclusion of the service the bride and bridegroom were conducted by the Lord Chamberlain to an adjoining apartment. Her Majesty the Queen remained until all present at the Ceremony had withdrawn, and then retired. The other royal and illustrious personages and guests proceeded to the drawing room.

The marriage register was taken by the Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor to her Majesty and the bride and bridegroom for their signatures, and subsequently to the drawing room, for the signatures of the remaining witnesses.

The dress worn on the occasion was morning dress—the gentlemen in black evening coats, white waistcoats, grey trousers and black neckcloths, and the ladies in grey or violet morning dresses, and grey or white gloves.

Extraordinary Imposture and Credulity.

A man, named Henry Simmonite, was charged at Sheffield, on Saturday, under pretence of telling fortunes. For some time the police have suspected that the prisoner was carrying on a system of imposition, and pretending to "cast nativities" and tell fortunes, by which a large number of foolish persons had been victimised. On Friday, two women were sent to the shop by the police, duly instructed in the part they were to play. They were introduced to the prisoner, and one of them, Mrs. Norton, wished to find out the whereabouts of her husband. The prisoner, after consulting his books ascertaining the day and hour of the birth of the querist, informed her that her husband had left the town with a woman of loose habits, and he added that that was not the first excursion of the kind he had made. He also stated that the man would be punished by falling off a building when he returned. The other woman was told that her husband was carrying on an intrigue with a female in the neighbourhood of his house. The women were scarcely able to preserve the necessary gravity of demeanour whilst the "professor" was pouring forth such a farrago of nonsense, for both of them had left their husbands quietly at home, awaiting in great glee the result of the expedition. However, they paid the shilling which was demanded from each of them and left the place. A few hours afterwards, detective officers Airey and Brayshaw proceeded, armed with a warrant, to the studio of the magician, and surprised him as he was engaged in making out a "map of birth." The officers took away a voluminous and neatly-kept "diary," in which the fellow had entered the names and addresses of all his clients for years past. The book contains the names of a large number of "respectable" people in Sheffield, mostly females, and others in Manchester, Leeds, Hull, Isle of Man, and in fact almost every county in the United Kingdom has contributed its quota. It is known that at the present time several respectable women in Sheffield have separated from their husbands in consequence of the stories of the unfaithfulness of the latter, which have been told them by the prisoner. In the drawers in his office were found large numbers of letters, asking for information on various matters—love, marriage, and prospective legacies being the theme of most of the writers. Remittances had been enclosed in each, with stamped and directed envelopes for replies; and the collection of names and addresses now in in the possession of the police is both extensive and curious. When the prisoner was brought before the beach, he appeared exceeding clopfallen, and promised not to repeat the offence. He was sent for a month to Wakefield, with hard labour.—Manchester Guardian.

A Tax Bill for the Ladies.

[From the Rochester Democrat.]

Since the passage of the tax bill, the following amendments have been suggested as appropriate, by a correspondent, who hopes that Congress will reconsider the bill, and add his amendments. He says:

Since the report of the tax bill was published, several new amendments have been proposed as follows:

For kissing a pretty girl, $1.00.

For kissing a homely one $2—the extra amount being added probably as a punishment for the man's folly.

For ladies kissing each other $10. The tax is placed at this rate in order to break up the custom altogether, it being regarded by our M. C. as a prize of inexcusable ability.

For every flixation 10 cts.

Every young man who has more than one "gal" to be taxed $5.

For courting in the kitchen 25 cents.

Courting in the parlor, $1, and 50 cents for each offence thereafter.

Seeing a lady home from church five cents—the proceeds to be appropriated to the relief of disabled army chaplains.

For a lady who paints, 50 cents.

For wearing low-necked dresses, $1.

For each curl on a lady's head above ten, five cents.

For every unfair device for entrapping young men into the sin of matrimony, $5.

For wearing hoops longer than ten feet in circumference 8 cts per hoop.

Old bachelors over thirty, $10; over forty, $20; over fifty, $50, and sentenced to banishment to Utah.

Each pretty lady is to be taxed from 25 cents to $10—this to be the estimate on her own beauty. If in the gist that a very large revenue will be realized from this source.

THE GAL THAT TOOK HIM.—A good story is told of a Bostonian's first appearance in polite society in Arkansas. The company was engaged in dancing, and the loveliest female present occupied a chair near the window without a partner. Stepping up to the lady, with palpitating heart, he exclaimed:—"Will you do me the honour to grace me with your company for the next set?" Her lustrous eyes shone with unusual brilliancy, her pearly teeth glistened, her snowy bosom rose and fell with joy-raptures, as she replied:—"You shoves! for I've not, and not, and not, till I've had tuk root!"—Miner's (Pottsville) Journal.

A Policeman Murdered and another Shot at Ashton-under-Lyne.

From the Manchester Guardian.

A dreadful crime was committed in the neighborhood of Ashton-under-Lyne early on Saturday morning. It appears that about two o'clock Sergeant Harrop and Police-Constable Jump, of the Lancashire constabulary, were on duty at Smallshaw, when they came upon a band of seven or eight men, masked, and armed with bludgeons and pistols or revolvers. They appeared to be brickmakers, and the officers at once suspected that they had been engaged in the perpetration of some of those outrages from which the master brickmakers of the district have suffered so severely. They were in a field leading from Smallshaw Fold to Broadoak Lane. The field forms a portion of a farm occupied by Mr. Edward Parker. The officers challenged them; a scuffle took place and two of the men were taken into custody. An appeal was made by one of the men, who asked his companions, "Do you mean to stand this?" Jump had a desperate struggle with one of them, and received a severe blow on the back of his head. Harrop succeeded in wrenching a bludgeon from one of the men. It proved to be the shaft of a navigator's spade; and with this formidable weapon he attacked his assailants. There are only about five families in Smallshaw Ford, and these were all alarmed by hearing shots fired. A Mrs. Hulme, on looking through her bed room window, saw Jump intercepting one of the men, who was attempting to escape through a stile, and she heard the man say to Jump, "If you don't let me pass, I shall blow you to pieces." She states that she then heard two more shots fired, and heard Jump cry out "Catch him." Harrop was fired at first, and the shot struck him on the face, inflicting a wound over his right eye, and he was afterwards shot at twice, one ball going over his head and the other whizzing past the left side of his face. When Jump was shot, he leaned against a gate, and uttered an exclamation of pain, which caused Harrop to immediately turn his attention to the unfortunate man whom he found was dying. The villains then escaped, two of them running towards Wilshaw, and the remainder thro' Smallshaw Fold, towards Ashton-under-Lyne. Jump was conveyed to the house of Samuel Williamson, of Smallshaw Fold, and Mr. Lees, surgeon, of Ashton, was sent for, but the poor fellow was dead when Mr. Lees arrived. The body was then conveyed to the head police station, at Withshaw, and an examination made. Mr. Lees found two bullet holes in the left breast, and extracted one bullet from under the skin of the back. The deceased leaves a widow and five small children, and, to add to the calamity the poor woman is enceinte. Jump was 29 years of age, and first entered the Lancashire constabulary in September, 1856, being stationed at Droylsden; but at the time of his death he was stationed at Hurst.

The utmost excitement has prevailed in Ashton and the district in connection with this murder, and the feeling is very strong that its perpetrators are union brickmakers. It seems that about a quarter past twelve on Friday morning, two men were seen by Richard Dunning, a watchman for Mr. Martin Smethurst, who has a brick-yard at Guide Bridge, lurking about the yard, and a shot was fired at a man in the yard, which took effect in his back. Dunning then fired, and it is supposed with some effect, as a scream was heard. A short time before the murder 18,000 bricks were destroyed in the brickyard of Mr. Clifford, of Ridgehill, near Stalybridge; and it is supposed the men, when they were met by the officers, were returning from this brickfield.

A meeting of County Magistrates was held at Ashton at noon, when it was resolved to send particulars of the murder to Sir George Grey, and ask that a reward might be offered for the apprehension and conviction of the murderers. This was telegraphed about one o'clock, and an answer was received at four o'clock. The result of this application will be learned from the following announcement:—

"£200 Reward—Murder—Whereas, early this morning, Police Constable William Jump, and Sergeant George Harrop, were on duty at Smallshaw, in the parish of Ashton-under-Lyne, where they were met by seven or eight men, masked and armed with bludgeons and firearms, one of whom fired two shots at and killed Police constable Jump, and others of the party fired several shots at the wounded Police Sergeant Harrop; Notice is hereby given, that a reward of £100 will be paid by the magistrates of the county, and a further reward of £100 by her Majesty's Government, to any person giving such information and evidence as shall lead to the discovery and conviction of the murderer; and the Secretary of State has instanted that he will advise the grant of her Majesty's gracious pardon to any accomplice giving such information and evidence as shall lead to the same result. Information to be given to the chief constables of the county, at Preston; to Mr. King, the assistant chief constable, Bootle, near Liverpool; and to Mr. Ludlam, superintendent of police, Wilshaw, Ashton-under-Lyne,—By order of the Magistrates.

"W. P. ELCEE, Chief Constable of Lancashire.

"Town Hall, Ashton-under-Lyne, June 28, 1862."

The utmost exertions to discover the perpetrators of the murder were made during Saturday and Sunday, but hitherto with little, if any success, though it is stated that a clue has been discovered. One man was apprehended shortly after the occurrence, but he was liberated, as there was no evidence to connect him with the crime.

A SURE MISTAKE.—The Memphis Appeal of June 6th, contains the following: We hear Gen. Geo-head Jackson is in Frederick, Maryland, and that orders have actually been sent to him from the War Department to push on to the relief of Baltimore, or the reduction of Washington, whichever he may prefer.

Unmoved by Woman's Tears.

The wife of a poor drunkard approached a notorious liquor-seller, and with great tears rolling down her cheeks, she plead, urged begged, prayed, and used every entreaty to induce him to sell no more liquor to her besotted husband. He listened to her with silent contempt for a while, and then assured her that while her husband brought the money he should let him have just as much liquor as it would pay for! This man lives in a moral community, and has heard the Gospel preached. He probably keeps a Bible in his own house, and may possibly believe that the righteous shall be saved and the wicked damned. From certain acts of his in past years, it is presumed that he believes man to be invested with an undying principle that must enjoy infinite bliss, or realize untold anguish forever. And yet he acts as though he doubted all these solemn realities, and as though he believed the gathering together a few pieces of silver was the great and final purpose for which he was created.

We venture the assertion that there is no other vocation under the sun that so blunts the sensibilities of a man as that of liquor selling. Let any man engage in it, and after a very short apprenticeship under the grand master of evil, it will be found that whatever was good and praiseworthy in him before, has been destroyed and supplanted by the evil that has grown up so rapidly within him. There is no man so poisoned with natural meanness as to be entirely insensible to the emotions of pity, sympathy, and the other finer traits that stir the human soul—the very worst are sometimes moved and grieved for the sorrows of others; but the regular liquor seller is as hard as flint, and nothing seems capable of arousing him to a sense of his sin against his fellow beings short of seeing vengence of an insulted Heaven. Every energy and every faculty of his sordid soul is strained to the utmost to gather the miserable pittances that come to his box of blood money, and no scene of desolation caused by his unholy traffic affects him or stops him for a moment; Let whosoever cometh with the money, shall have his infamous merchandize, that kills—that dooms—that damns!

Here is a young man that once bid fair to lead a life to usefulness and honor. The liquor seller set a trap in his path and he has been ensnared. He is a hopelessly drunken, drivelling sot—and an old father's hand is bowed with sorrow for his best loved, and silver has fallen into the guilty palm of the destroyer. There is a group of fatherless children—ragged, ignorant, and hungry. Had their father lived they would have been decently clad, learning wisdom at school, intelligent and happy; but a poor, sick mother cannot bestow these blessings upon the fatherless, and the world seems dark and gloomy to their young vision. And dead father's property went into the grog shop, and his soul went out from it to test the solemnities of another world. There is a young woman, the mourning widow of a young man who died from excessive drinking, brought from his suffering vampire; her young heart is crushed, and she bows her throbbing head upon the old graveyard fence and weeps, oh! how bitterly! And there is a heart broken wife standing up before him and begging him with all the gift of language she can muster, while the great tear-drops seem embodies to help her plead with the iron hearted wretch to sell her husband no more liquor; but he cares not for her sorrow—he heeds not her cries—he scorns her tears. "While he brings money he may have just as much liquor as it pays for!"

Hard, dusty, ironsouled wretch! Give him less than the "thirty pieces of silver," for which Judas betrayed the guileless Nazarene, and he would turn loose a tide of dissolution that should engulph and destroy millions. Unmoved by woman's tears, nothing of earthely power or human sympathy can stay his bloody hand; but there is a Power that shall one day say: "Thou farthest thou come and no further shalt thou go;" "for your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it."

The License System a Ghost.

It promises Revenue. But it imposes a tax upon the people more than ten times the amount of the license fee. It gives you ten dollars for the opportunity to steal from you hundreds.

It promises to restrict Intemperance. And there, too, it plays false. The business of drunkard making, and homicides. As well might the authorities of New Orleans license men to give the yellow fever in order to restrict the plague, as for Government to set apart men for the special purpose of selling rum by the glass. The sanction of Government given eliminates to the beneficiaries in giving a monopoly. Government does not limit the supply, but stimulates those who pay for it to drive the traffic faster and further than before.

It promises to secure temperate, reputable men in the business. It does not do it. All characters are licensed—men of every stripe, American and foreign born—men with conscience, and men with only a pliant where conscience ought to grow. The power of life and death is still placed in the hands of the vilest men.

It undertakes to punish men for getting just where this trap puts them. It proposes to punish the disorderly sale of liquor, and to be severe upon rowdyism as it traverses. But such disorder is the natural fruit of the system. The tendency of the licensed system is to disorder; it all comes to this as water seeks to its level. It hatches out a dragon brood, and then when it has nurtured and reared them, tries to corner them, and put a stop to their havoc. How funny it looks to see the license law coming down upon disorderly houses and rowdyism. A fish swimming after its own tail is not more absurd.

It smuggles in rum shops with food and lodging, as necessary for the public accomodation. When twelve five hobbies have certified to the necessity of a place for the accommodation of the travelling public, up goes a rum tavern. It is fiction meeting the part of the good Samaritan. The license law is the father which offers you bread, but gives you a stone.

It professes to license dram shops "for the public good." It diverts attention from its murderous work by banal words. It bottles up for you pauperism, misery, crime and taxation, and labels them "good." It pours out upon the public its vials of wrath, and says,—"it is good!" Rum, freemen of America! Forget the deceiver! Cleave, in one broad plenum upon this lying spirit—this license system. Hurl this destroyer from its seat of power! Let this monster of misery crimes, this author of many woes, be laid prostrate in the dust, to rise no more!

Training the Child's Body.

Whatever you wish your child to be, be it yourself. If you wish it to be happy, turn thy, sober, truthful, affectionate, honest, and godly, be yourself all these. If you wish it to be lazy and sulky, and a liar and a drunkard and a swearer, be yourself all these. As the old cock crows the young cock learns. You remember who said, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it?" And you may, as a general rule, as soon expect to gather grapes from thorns and figs from thistles, as get good, healthy, happy children from diseased and lazy and wicked parents. Let me put you in mind seriously of one thing you ought to get done to all your children, and that is, to have them vaccinated or inoculated with the cow-pock. The best time for this is two months after birth, but better late than never and in these times you need never have any excuse for its not being done. You have only to take your children to the Old or the New Town dispensaries. It is a real crime, I think, in parents to neglect this. It is cruel to their child, and it is a crime to the public. If every child in the world were vaccinated, which might be managed in a few years, that loathsome and deadly disease, the small-pox, would disappear from the face of the earth; but many people are so stupid and so lazy and so prejudiced as to neglect this plain duty until it is too late. So promise me all seriously in your hearts to see to it immediately. Be always frank and open with your children. Make them trust you and tell you all the secrets. Make them feel at ease with you, and make free with them. There is no such good playthings for grown-up children like you and me as scarus was once. It is wonderful what you can get them to do with little coaxing and fun. You all know this as well as I do, and you will practice it every day in your own families. Here is a pleasant little story out of an old book. "A gentleman having led a company of children beyond their usual journey, they began to get weary, and intend to him to carry them on his back, but because of their multitude he could not do this. 'But,' says he, 'I'll get horses for us all;' upon, cutting little wands out of the hedges as ponies for them, and a stake on a charger for himself, they put mettle in their little legs, and they rode cheerily home. So much for a bit of ingenious fun.—Dr. John Brown's Essay on Health.

Essence of Meanness.

The man who will take a newspaper for a length of time, and send it back 'refused' and unpaid for, would swallow a blind dog's dinner, and then stone the dog for being blind.

He would do worse than that. He would marry a girl on trial, and send her back at the end of the honeymoon, with the words 'don't suit' chalked on her back.—Iron City.

He would do worse than that. He would steal the chalk to write with, and afterwards he would use it on his shirt to save the expense of washing, and then use his wife's father for a month's board.—Advertiser.

Worse yet. He'd chase a rat ten miles over a cordoroy road, and institute a post mortem examination after he caught him, in order to receive a stolen grain of corn.—Montgomery Star.

We endorse every word of the above. He would steal rotten acorns from a blind hog and rob the editor of all his winter meat.—Herald.

The Saturday.—We despise meanness as much as any one can, and think it the duty of every publisher to 'resist' leading into temptation' by giving the opportunity to be mean. The only remedy is to make all pay in advance for their paper; they will not return it. On no other principle do we work, and no other paper can be safely published otherwise.—Waverly Magazine.

The Victor Gazette says:—"One day last week a respectable farmer, residing about three miles from Picton, was taken very much by surprise when told that a new Government had come into power, and that the old one had been defeated at the Wallis Hill. He is also under the impression that Sir Edmund Head is still Governor of Canada, and that "Old Buck" is still President of the United States. He did not know anything about the changes that have taken place, as he does not attend himself and his family the luxury of a newspaper."

ATTACK BY A BEAR.—A bear in a menagerie at Alsfeld, a few days ago, seized hold of one of the attendants who had entered the cage. The injured man was conveyed to the hospital.

The Turning Point.

AN INCIDENT IN THE LIFE OF AMOS LAWRENCE.

From the District school, he entered Groton Academy. But he passed only a few months here; and then he was placed in a small store in the town of Dunstable. Soon he was transferred to the store of Mr. Brazer, at Groton, his native town. Mr. Brazer kept several clerks, but as active boys as young Lawrence and so reliable, that in less than two years, the whole responsibility of the establishment rested upon him.

The quantity of rum and brandy sold at this country store would surprise the temperance men of Boston. Grog was in demand every day at eleven, and four o'clock. Two or three times young Lawrence drank with the others; but, finding this daily use of liquor growing into a habit, he said to himself that he would not be enslaved; and he kept his resolution, though he did more with far a severer struggle, but by one firmin the resolution of total abstinence.

Many years afterwards, he wrote to a relative to this effect, respecting this resolution:

"In the first place, take this for your motto at the commencement of your journey, that the Maker of all gives just right to labor to engage, and be the first one at your appointed job, good overtook, or in a reasonable day or night, at the end of it. Of the whole number educated in the Groton academy for some ten or twelve years before and after myself, you may be sure I was the most constant, except the boy at the plough; and my opinion, I take it, is based on fact of my having been a considerable years my superior. We five boys were in the habit, every afternoon of making a daily consumption of rum, sugar, cigars, tobacco, etc., with biscuit—all paid down to cut and drink.

"Upon looking in the store four months, I found myself diminished by my appetite, of the proceeds of the sum of independence. I then left off drinking with them. I resolved to abstain for the rest of my apprenticeship, or minority, five years. During that period, I never drank a dollar's worth of spirits, wine, beer, cider, or any other liquor, except sent in here, in my absence, a number likewise cigars, given me and some since, by a friend, but only to smell of.

"I left Brazer in my life smoked a cigar, never chewed but one quid, and that was before I was fifteen, and never took an ounce of snuff, though the constant fragrance of thirty years ago, and, for, great chimes to me. Now I say, to the simple fact of starting just right, I am indebted, with God's blessing on my labors, for my present position, as well as that of the numerous connections arising up around me.

"I have many details that now appear as plain to me, as the sun at noonday, by which events are deposited together, and which have led by results that call on me to bless the Lord for all his benefits, and to use the opportunities time permitted to me, in cheering on the generation of the young men, who bear claims upon my sympathies as relations, fellow-townsmen, on a more enlarged scale."

Probably, no man ever did more for his relations, his townsmen, or his brethren in the community. I mean as private citizen. His relatives were mostly poor. He was the means of making them rich, and of elevating them to high posts of influence and honor.

For young men, as you see in the above extract, he ever cherished the kindest feeling, and put forth the most benevolent efforts for their good.

About the same period, he wrote to another young man: "When I look back, I can trace the small events that happened at your age as having an influence upon all the after things."

"Thus little young men consider what momentous consequences follow what they disdain the little affairs of early life.

How the Fourth was spent in Cincinnatti.

The national anniversary was family celebrated in this city. There were no processions, and no demonstrations save those within up on individual responsibility. There was considerable display of bunting throughout the city, but not the amount as on the occasions in former years, and a great deal of gunpowder was expended, but, on the whole, the spirits of enthusiasm was confined almost exclusively to the juveniles. A happy feature of the day was the very large number of little girls on the streets dressed in red, white and blue.

It started there were no processions. There was one. The Fremont Body Guard advertised that they would have a procession. The line of march was published forty-eight hours in advance and thousands gathered on the streets to witness the grand procession. Well the Body Guard came and went, and nobody saw the procession. The truth is, it consisted of a dozen and a half horsemen, all told. People would not believe that was the procession, but it was. The "sell" was a good joke, either upon the people or the Body Guard.

The parade for the benefit of the orphans was a huge affair. Thousands attended it. Judge Woodruff acted as marshal and center, and his remarks were highly patriotic and appropriate. Our friend Ned Kendall made an efficient Grand Marshal.

The American Protestant Association paraded early in the morning, making a beautiful display, and then with their crowds and sweethearts ran down by car to Lawrenceburg. They had a jolly time.

Picnic parties went out in every direction, and by all sorts of conveyances. In the meantime, large parties came to the city from Madison and Indianapolis, and they engaged to enjoy themselves heartily at the close of the day.

A supplementary account of independent celebrations was set off, during the evening. The day was ushered in by the ringing of bells and at sunrise, noon and sunset, Capt. Rinehart fired national salutes from the Public Landing.—Times.

Slave Trade.

A Liberal farmer, subscribed in his neighborhood for his increasing strength and skill in all athletic exercises, very frequently had occasion to buy things could replace himself. He had a great deal of business to do, and a great many things to buy. Among other things, he bought a great many negroes. He bought them in Africa, and brought them to this country, and sold them at a great deal of profit. I have heard that he was a very kind master to his slaves, and that he was very much beloved by them. I remember, however, a few years ago, when I was a little boy, I saw a great many negroes on board of a ship in the harbor of Boston. The Government, however, soon after, captured the noble lord in the midst of his body, pitched him over the bulwarks, and they all went sweeping again. What do you probably think got up? Slavery, said the farmer, "never can do anything under the sun!" said Mr. Reed, replied his friend, "but perhaps you'd be kind enough to throw me my horse!"

Peterborough Examiner.

Thursday, July [illegible], 1862.

It has been [illegible] used by the American a reward England[illegible] who was burdened with an objectionable debt—that her people were sorely oppressed by taxes, in paying the interest accruing thereon—and, by way of contrast, we were pointed to their own nation, as next to free from debt, and the people all but relieved from taxes; the latter a state of affairs which many thousands of emigrants from Great Britain felt glad in seeking.

The facts above alluded to although used disparagingly and vauntingly, were, nevertheless facts, and readily admitted point in regard to the former, the people of England, although despairing of paying off their enormous debt, console themselves that its very existence is a source of safety to the nation, and cheerfully submit to the taxation required for to pay the interest thereon. It has been incurred within 170 years for war purposes, during a period when not only the very existence of England as a nation was menaced, but that also of many of the States of Europe likewise. It was chiefly though not exclusively for such pressing necessities that this large debt was contracted, and although various attempts have been made for its reduction, it has varied but little for the last 47 years. At the commencement of the reign of our Queen's grandfather, George III., in 1761, the entire national debt of Great Britain was £174,394,977; in 30 years after, it had risen to £239,563,421—more than double. From that period to the close of war in 1815, a period of only 23 years, but one of almost continued warfare, the public debt had assumed the enormous dimensions of £861,039,049—the highest point it has ever reached. A considerable reduction took place till 1834, when it reached its lowest point since 1815, viz: £773,234,401. The Slave Indemnity Fund, and the Russian War followed, when it arose again to £808,108,722. Since then it has been somewhat reduced, and it is supposed now to stand somewhat above, [illegible] involving an annual charge of [illegible],204,299, to be borne by the capital and industry of the country.

Fearful as these figures appear, and really are, the reader of history must be aware of the fearful attempts made to annihilate the British Empire. Two successive Emperors exhausted every available force for this purpose, but in vain. England had to fight for her existence—for her liberty—aye, and for the existence and liberty of many of the States of Europe besides; and she stands forth to-day the defender and advocate of civil and religious freedom. It was by the dire necessity of war that her debt was contracted, and although she had mighty foes to contend with from 1793 to 1815, the most eventful period of her history, as well as the most conspicuous for the wars in which she was engaged, the debt increased only at the rate of about 18 millions yearly. But during the Session of Congress of the United States just closed, we find that for the prosecution of the civil war in which that nation is plunged, the enormous sum of $600,000,000 is appropriated, while the war is not yet a year and a-half inaugurated—a sum equal to one-fifth of that of Great Britain, and to be borne by a less number of people. Where the English owe pounds the Americans have appropriated, at one session of Congress dollars. And it is calculated by competent authorities in the United States, that by the first of January next the war debt proper will amount to the enormous sum of $2,000,000,000, and that besides the debt incurred by the individual States for the raising and equipping the respective regiments sent by them to the Federal Government by that time, will amount to $700,000,000. Thus making the war debt alone the enormous sum of $2,700,000,000, with an annual charge of interest at 7 per cent of $189,000,000. The principal of this debt is about equal to two-thirds of the debt of Great Britain, while the annual charge will be greater by by over $40,000,000. This is chiefly accounted for, in the fact of the funded debt of England, bearing interest at 3 to 3½ per cent, while that of the United States funds interest at 7 per cent. While our continent stands longer, and, at present, we see no prospect of its early termination, who can doubt that ere long it will be equal that of England's.

The last levy of $500,000, men is about being raised among the United States funded debt quota, and the statement daily runs the financial movement of the nation, is looked for with the enhanced value of the Federal bonds. While three months formerly very few if [illegible] and those determined not to buy back again, likely to follow the cheerful example of their betters; "the crowding of that locomotive." Also! could [illegible] three-per cent to be taxed with of the merchants, are their hands into vaulted and treasures, are their hands into vaulted Our best blessings of the daughter of the [illegible] who murders their arm for hope inflicts the murders that arm for their benefit, and we cannot not to pray that this great, unnatural war may soon be at an end.

Miscellaneous machines, as churns and dairy utensils, fittings and feeding-troughs for the cowhouse, apple mills and cider presses, machines for weaving straw thatch, &c. 5. Horticultural appliances, as garden engines, roots, conservatories, &c. This department of the Exhibition must be regarded as the crowning show of the Royal Agricultural Society—gardening and farming being jointly represented. All the principal implement makers exhibit, and as the reaping machine was the great novelty of the 1851 Exhibition in this important division of human industry, steam cultivation will be found the chief characteristic of the present display. An engine and apparatus for effecting that result were exhibited in 1851, but the practical solution of the difficulty has been accomplished in the interval of the last 11 years. There will be found in the building examples of all the systems of steam cultivation recently made public, and also illustrative models and diagrams. The present show of agricultural implements also exhibits the great improvement which has taken place in the reaping machine, a novelty in 1851, and the introduction of mowing machines as a natural consequence thereof.

The Galleries are principally occupied with paintings, sculpture, and the other fine arts; but we must forego any effort to particularize. In our next we will notice several of the most interesting pieces in London.

Cold-Blooded Murder and Robbery in a Gambling House.

A cold-blooded murder—one in which money was the motive that led to the commission of the crime—occurred at Whaley's gambling saloon, on Baker street, sometime between the hours of two and ten o'clock on Wednesday morning. The victim was Geo. Walters, of Paris, Ky., who had been rooming at the establishment for some time, following the occupation of a gambler.

Tuesday night he had been remarkably successful, and when he left the game, retired with over $4,000, and two gold watches. He went to his room between one and two o'clock in the morning, and it is supposed deposited his money in his trunk—that being his usual custom.

From that time until ten o'clock Wednesday morning, no noise or disturbance was heard in his apartments, and nothing occurred to arouse suspicion of foul play, until one of the negro waiters went up to awake him. The negro knocked on the door several times, but received no answer, and then tried the latch, and was surprised to find that the door was unlocked.

He immediately entered the room, and there he found the floor covered with bedclothes, papers, letters, &c., and on arriving at the bed, found Walters lying on his face partly covered with a sheet—dead.

The negro being frightened, ran down stairs and alarmed the house, and in a short time a crowd had gathered there, and the Coroner was sent for.

Walters had evidently been lying asleep when the assailant attacked him, probably on his face or left side, as the blow which was evidently the fatal one, was struck behind the right ear. There were several other bruises on his body.

The murderers after having disposed of the victim, unlocked his trunk—he always kept the key under his head, and they had discovered its whereabouts—and had scattered its contents, or such as were not valuable, on the floor. A few half dollars were not taken away, but all the rest of the money was gone.

It is believed that he must have been murdered soon after retiring. He was very black when discovered and the little blood that flowed from his wounds had become solidified.

As yet no clue to the perpetrators of the act has been discovered; but it is believed that the villain or villains, as the case may be, must have been familiar with the house and with the habits of the man. He had no room-mate, nor were there any other lodger in the building Tuesday night.

FURTHER DEVELOPMENTS.

Since the above was written, our reporter took a second examination of the room, and also learned some further particulars from habitues of the establishment. There had undoubtedly been considerable of a struggle, as one of the supporters of the bedstead canopy was broken, and the chandelier was bent. His knuckles were somewhat black evincing that there had been a fight on the floor.

In the back room was found a large bowlder, laying on a blanket, which had been thrown on the floor. A dent was also found on the floor, which was made the night of the murder.

We also learn that Mr. Whately, proprietor of the establishment, left two days before the murder for New York, and that Mr Walters was in charge, and that he had in his possession the money of the concern. Mr. W. usually acted as dealer for the house.

He was 33 years of age, and was unmarried. He has a number of friends in and around Paris.

The Coroner's jury returned the following verdict: "We, the Jury, find that the deceased came to his death by strangulation from the hands of some person or persons unknown to the Jury."

The Civil War in America.

In the House of Lords, on Monday evening, Lord Brougham addressed a few words to their lordships on the subject of the horrible civil war which was now ranging in America. His private information, derived from persons most friendly to England and America, which they received from persons on the spot and mixed up in the sad affair, surpassed very considerably the horrible and loathsome accounts which had been published. Not only were thousands upon thousands embattled on one side and the other, displaying a degree of courage which was above all commendation, but the war had taken root in society in every rank of life, and was carried on with all the horrors of a civil conflict. The inhabitants of the same village were branded against each other, and next door neighbours went forth to fight, not in the army, but as we should say in bands of the passes, to gratify their political animosity. He knew the case of one respectable family in which the son and father took opposite sides, and the son said that he hoped to hear of his father's death. He threw no imputation on the character of the American people, for it was incident to and inseparable from civil war that there horrible crimes should occur. It was proverbial that the corruption of the best was the worst of all. Now it was clear that neither England nor France ought to intervene. (Hear.) But all must feel equally anxious that their conflict should cease. They who were most friendly to America were most anxious that this should take place, and he had ever been most friendly to her. For upwards of sixty years he had been the warm advocate at all times of the American Government and people, and there were those in the house who could remember that he had been called a partisan of Jefferson and the attorney-general of Madison. He was, therefore, most sensibly disappointed and grievously touched at what was taking place in that country. If the war was to go on, it would produce a state of things worse than Americans did dream of. The whites would suffer more by war than ever the negroes suffered under the most cruel of masters. The war was creating scenes worse in and misery, and would lay the foundation of more lasting calamity and injury than all that had been said against what was a domestic institution. If they could only listen to the voice of their true friends, they would see the absolute necessity of their regarding the consequences of their opposition to peace, and of putting an end to this civil war. He could not but believe that the good sense of the good and reflecting amongst them would prevail [illegible] soon, and that they would succeed in putting an end to this calamitous war, which was what the truest and most sincere friends of America most ardently desired.

BANK OF TORONTO.

PROCEEDINGS of the Sixth Annual General Meeting of the Stockholders, held at the Banking House of the Institution in Toronto, on Wednesday, 16th July, 1862.

The Annual general meeting of the Bank of Toronto, (being the sixth since the commencement of business), was held in conformity with the Charter, at the Banking House of the Institution, in Toronto, this day.

On the motion of J. G. Worts, seconded by Thomas Baxter, Esq., J. G. Chewett, Esq., was called to the chair, and Mr. Dewar appointed Secretary.

At the request of the Chairman, the Acting Cashier then read the Annual Report, as follows:—

REPORT.

The Directors of the Bank of Toronto, in presenting their Sixth Annual Report, have pleasure in stating that the business of the past year has been satisfactory.

The resources of the Bank have been profitably employed, and though the derangement of the currency of a neighbouring country has necessitated a policy of more than ordinary caution, your directors have been able to afford every facility for the transaction of legitimate business.

The profits for the year, after payment of expenses, and providing for bad and doubtful debts, have amounted to the sum of—$60,947 16

Add to this the balance unappropriated in 1861 ..... 1,445 13

Making a total of $61,992 29

From this the following appropriations have been made:—

Government Tax on Circulation ..... $ 2,527 16
Dividend No. 11, 4 per cent 31,556 80
Dividend No. 12, 4 per cent 31,556 80 $65,992 96

Leaving a balance of $25,296 31

Of this amount the sum of $25,000 has been added to the rest making the same $100,000; the balance of $296 31 remained at the credit of profit and loss.

The business at the Head Office having rendered increased accomodation necessary, it has been determined to erect a suitable building. A lot has been purchased in a central position, and the erection of the Bank is now being proceeded with.

The Directors again bear testimony to the zeal and fidelity with which the Cashier, Agents and other Officers of the Bank have discharged their respective duties.

(Signed) J. G. CREWITT, President.

PERFECTION

CHURN!

PATENTED IN APRIL, 1862,

By J. W. Smith,

OF PRESCOTT, C. W.

THIS CHURN is decidedly the most useful that has yet been invented. By it the largest churning can be put in butter in ten minutes. The cream is poured into a tin hopper on the top of the churn, and runs through a Rock Breaker, which immediately crushes the butter specks of the cream. By the time the cream runs through the crusher it is perfectly cool, and prepared for making butter immediately. One of these churns may be seen at the

NORTH AMERICAN HOTEL,

and at the

STEWART HOUSE,

PETERBORO.

and we only ask persons to come and examine it. They will at a glance be convinced that it is the quickest, most labor saving, and in every respect the best and cheapest Churn ever offered to the public. One real advantage of this churn is that the cream will yield five per cent more butter than can be obtained by any other known process. This difference alone will make the price of the churn in a very short time.

The exclusive right to manufacture and sell these churns in the United Counties of Peterborough and Victoria has been purchased by the undersigned, and they are now prepared to supply them, made with great care, and warranted perfect in every particular.

Further information regarding these valuable Churns may be had on application to

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORTS. - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen on Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair.

There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States before-mentioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurance during the year, contained in 1139 Proposal	£454,838 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 961 Policies were issued	339,280 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS on said Policies	11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPAT ON POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantee	12,989 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assured under 4,289 current LIFE POLICIES	1,265,95 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS	372,443 2 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE	56,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report Stated that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his entire approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out, as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £36,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 16s 7d., to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £217,921 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinised in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realised on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become eligible by Death prematurely to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sums assured; that the total additions to the sum assured, now vested, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured; and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 15 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

Year ended 31st January.	Amounts proposed for Assurance.	Amount of New Policies issued.	No. of Policies issued.	New Annual Premiums.	Total Revenue in each year.	Accumulated Funds.

MATHEWS'

VENETIAN LIQUID

HAIR DYE.

THIS CELEBRATED DYE WAS FIRST prepared in 1845; since that time it has been used by thousands, and in no instance has it failed to give perfect satisfaction.

THE VENETIAN DYE

is the cheapest in the world. Its price is only 50 cents, and each bottle contains double the quantity of dye contained in those usually sold for one dollar.

THE VENETIAN DYE

is the safest composition of its class. It is warranted not to injure the hair, or the scalp, in the slightest degree.

THE VENETIAN DYE

works with rapidity and certainty. It causes no annoyance or trouble to those who use it.

THE VENETIAN DYE

produces any shade that may be desired—one that will not fade, crock, nor wash out; one that is as permanent as the hair itself.

THE VENETIAN DYE

does not, in any manner, interfere with the natural softness of the hair; it neither scorches nor dries it.

THE VENETIAN DYE

is the best, cheapest safest, most convenient, most successful, and most permanent Dye ever used.

THE VENETIAN DYE

having gained an extended reputation, the public are cautioned against purchasing any prepared in the same style, under the color or different name, as they are mere imitations, and liable to do injury.

For sale by all agents. Prepared only by

The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. Poetry.

DROUGHT.

BY T. HULBERT CHURCHWOOD.

The hot days, coming one by one,
Like fiery-sandalled troopers run
From out the centre of the sun;
Their burning tracks are on the leaves,
The corn is crisped to husky reeds,
And sharply pipes its thirsty needs,
And from the moaning summer weeds
The scorching wind a death-song weaves.

The rose, with forehead white and fair,
Hard pressed between the palms of air,
Lies panting with the famine there,
Fanned by a hot-winged fever wind.
The wailing lillies, hand in hand
Low drooning in their sorrow stand,
Cuffed by the rude and brutal sand
Wherewith the garden walks are lined.

The coryapsis' golden arms,
Within whose glowing centre burns
A vestal flame, the beetle spurns
As lie they broken on the sand,
The heart a heap of vestal dust,
The sun a shattered writhi as crust,
The pedestal all red with rust,
And splintered like a shivered brand.

The pensive morning-glory tells
Her hour of prayer on broken bells—
On shattered, ear-distressing bells
That perpetrate a dismal din;
Her eyelids crisp, her garment scars,
The perfumed fountain of her tears
Is dry, her withered cheek appears
As haggard as the cheek of sin.

The whippoorwill with parching lip
Jerks out his voice with a sudden clip
That cuts the hot air like a whip,
And twangs an echo on the hill.
The swallow leaves the jewless sky,
And finding creek and crevice dry,
Sends up a weak and plaintive cry
In answer to the whippoorwill.

The hound lies gasping by the wall,
The steed is fainting in the stall'
The kine with thirsty famine fall
And perish on the dusty hill.
Men not so patient in their pain,
Mix curses with their prayers for rain,
And thus blasphemingly complain—
So weak or wicked is our will!

Miscellaneous.

Smith O'Brien on the American War.

Killiney, June 18, 1862.

MY DEAR SIR,—I send you a copy of a letter which I have written to my friend Richard O'Gorman, of New York, in reference to the civil war that is now raging in America. As it is not of a private nature, you are at liberty to publish it, in case you think that it is calculated to produce impressions tending towards a pacification of the existing conflict.

During several months I have entertained an anxious desire that the citizens of Dublin should be the first to raise their voices in favor of such a pacification, but I have hitherto been discouraged from a proposal to this effect by the general prevalence of an opinion that in the fury of civil strife meditation would have been unavailing.

Every friend of humanity must, however, now feel that the time has arrived when the Americans ought to be apprised of the deep regret with which their contention is witnessed by their well-wishers on this side the Atlantic. Since no nation in Europe has contributed so largely as Ireland to the population, and, I may add, also, to the wealth and power of the States, and since no nation in Europe entertains toward the Americans so kindly a sentiment as that which is felt by a great majority of our people, it seems to me that our friendly exhortations would be received with attention, if not with gratitude, and that they might tend to produce, at no distant date, a cessation of hostilities. In any case, the citizens of Dublin could not do anything which would secure for them more effectually the respect of mankind than such a demonstration of their feelings as that which I contemplate.

As you are in daily communication with influential leaders of opinion in Dublin, I venture to suggest that you ought to lose no time in endeavoring to ascertain whether a sufficient number of signatures could be obtained for an address or requisition to the Lord Mayor, requesting him to convene a meeting of the citizens of Dublin, for the purpose of making an appeal to the inhabitants of the Federal and Confederate States of America in favor of a peaceful settlement of their disputes.

I remain, my dear Sir,
Very faithfully yours.
WILLIAM S. O'BRIEN.

A. M. Sullivan, Esq.

Kilkinny, County Dublin, June 18, 1862.

MY DEAR O'GORMAN—In common with all true friends of the American people, I continue to regard with horror the internecine war which is desolating the States of America. The brutal and disgusting proclamation which has recently been promulgated by Gen. Butler, at New Orleans, realizes to our imaginations the worst features of this struggle.

Have you and your friends at New York calmly asked yourselves when and how this contention is to end? I implore you, in the name of humanity, to cast aside the illusions with which an occasional triumph fills the minds of the Northerner, and to consider whether it is possible that you can subjugate the South, and whether, if it were possible, such subjugation ought to be desired by the lovers of free institutions.

You know that I am not an advocate of slavery—you know that I deeply deplored the Secession and condemn those who provoked it. I may add, also, that I would have rejoiced if the Secession could have been put down at its commencement by the authorities of the Republic—in case they had been supported and assisted by a majority of the inhabitants of the Southern States; but ever since the battle of Bull's Run I have felt that, for good or for evil, the Secession has been an accomplished fact, (un fait accompli), and that an attempt to bring together again by force the dismembered members of the Republic, would only produce disasters greater than those which would result from brushing up the Union into several sections.

The progress of the war has confirmed these convictions. Triumphs have, indeed, been won by the Federals as well as by the Confederates; but what evidence can be brought forward to prove that any impression has been made in the support of the Union upon the minds of the Southerners by these triumphs? I will not call them conquests, because the Federal armies have conquered no ground, except that upon which they stand. The war has brought to all parties the most costly sacrifices, but it appears to have left the minds of the contending sections of the population in a state of more intense exasperation against each other than existed at the commencement of the struggle.

Nor ought you to forget that many of our countrymen in America are, at this moment, violating these rights of self-government which they wish to apply in Europe, not only to Ireland, but also to Hungary, to Venetia, and even to the Ionian Isles. The statesmen of England is infinitely better than any other government could be which would depend upon Greece. Yet the Ionian Islanders continue to declare, year after year, that they desire to be incorporated with the kingdom of Greece rather than to be "protected by England;" and all friends of freedom think that they ought to be allowed to choose for themselves in regard to such a question. In like manner, the inhabitants of the Southern States of America may or may not act very unwisely in desiring to re-establish for themselves an independent Confederacy; but no one can now doubt that such is their deliberate choice and, this being the case, to attempt to coerce them against their will into connection with the Northern States is a violation of the right of self-government—is, in fact, tyranny.

Has not the time arrived when calmly judging men such as you, can exercise a meditorial influence? The authorities at Washington are compelled to follow rather than to lead public opinion upon this, as upon all other occasions. You, virtually, could render no greater service to humanity than that which you would confer by first convening a meditorial committee at New York, and by subsequently inviting a mass meeting to proclaim its opinion in favor of an amicable adjustment of differences on terms which shall be consistent with the honor and security of all sections of the American people.

Above and beyond all other considerations beware of foreign intervention. Of course you will understand that I mean by this term armed intervention, not friendly interventions. From the day on which foreign arms shall be brought to compel a pacification, the prestige and dignity of both the Confederate and Federal States will be lost.

Believe me, my dear friend,
Yours, most sincerely
W. S. O'BRIEN.
Richard O'Gorman, Esq., New York.

Maiden Speech of an Old Sailor.

In the debate on fortifications, in the House of Commons, on Monday night, the speech of Captain Johnson excited great merriment. He said he rose with the greatest diffidence for the first time. (Hear, hear.) He held in his hand the accumulated wisdom of the Defence Commission.—(Laughter.) Their wisdom produced a report quite contrary to the evidence. (Hear, hear.) When he first entered the navy the term "defence" was not to be found in their vocabulary, but he was astonished to find that the terms "attack" and "aggression" were not to be met with in the columns of this report, and it seemed never to have entered into the imagination of the Defence Commission that England could attack as well as defend. (Hear, hear.) He wished to ask the noble and gallant admiral the Secretary of the Navy—(laughter)—who knew the localities, whether he would sooner attack Spithead or Cherbourg. He would answer for it, the noble lord would sooner attack Cherbourg. Of all ports in France that was the most assailable. It had been a bugbear to the old women of the country, and also to the old men and the young men of the country. (Loud laughter.) He had conversed with many hon. members on their return from Cherbourg, and all were impressed with the idea that it was a second Gibraltar, and not only impregnable, but invulnerable. (Renewed laughter.) Toulon, Brest, and L'Orient were difficult to attack, but Cherbourg was a roadstead through which the whole British fleet might be carried with impunity. What was France arming for? She had an army of 700,000 or 800,000 men—(laughter)—and a population of forty millions within a ring fence of the best description. (Renewed laughter.) Now, what had England to fear? He asked for the indulgence of the House—he was an old sailor, and spoke from the bottom of his heart. (Roars of laughter.) What had England to fear, with a maritime population of 450,000 men, with the best seamen in the universe, with an army incomparable, though small in number, to defend our native land; with militia to back that army, and with a band of rifle volunteers which were not only the glory of this country but the admiration of the world? (Loud laughter.) What had we to fear when we had a reserve of seamen of 15,000 men, who on a late occasion showed with what spirit they were animated, when they came forward as one man to avenge an insult that had been offered to the British flag?—(Hear, hear.) What had we to fear when we had the best engineers and artificers in the world, and coal and iron in abundance? What had we to fear but the inglorious defence policy, that gives economy a agreement to our enemies, and degrades and humiliates the British Navy? He had the honor of following the noble viscount into the lobby on three different occasions to support the vote for the breakwater at Aldernay; but, so far as the vote for Spithead was concerned, he could not support the noble lord. He thought it humiliation when the British Navy became merely a defensive power. (Laughter.) If this were so, the sun of our naval glory would soon set, and we might throw up the sponge and give in. (Roars of laughter.) There was no man in the land who looked upon war with greater detestation and horror than the humble individual who was then addressing them—(renewed laughter)—but until human nature changed, and man became converts to the benefi ful system of the hon. member for Birmingham (Mr. Bright), the time would not lie down with the lion. (Loud laughter.) Instead of allowing an invader to approach our shores, we ought to carry fire, sword, and destruction into all the enemy's ports, and prove the son of his forefathers. (Loud laughter.) Those were his sentiments. (Laughter.) He [illegible] Rome to [illegible] humiliated the British Navy by the sacrifice of those forts. (Loud laughter.) Once erected, they would remain imperishable monuments of the degeneracy of the greatest naval power that ever existed, and of our weakness and our folly. (Loud laughter.)

Sons of Temperance Column.

"Nearest way House."

The names by which liquor dealers christen their establishments are sometimes suggestive of reflections, if the passer by be at all disposed to moralize. While some low groggeries are held forth as the Washington House, the Columbia, the Jefferson, &c.,—high sounding titles dishonoring the illustrious names they have chosen, others are content with more humble cognomens, such as the Blue House, the Green House, and the Red House, all conveying good moral lessons if they were only heeded. The Half Way House, the Shades, and the Carry All House, are good titles and convey moral lessons. We once passed by one in a populous city, dignified by the title of the Nearest Way House. We said there was a pointed significance in the name. Its lesson was easy to read. What the knight of the toddy stick within its walls intended to convey we were at a loss to determine, but our own cogitations ran somewhat in this manner.

1. The grog shop is the nearest way to loss of friends and self-respect. In no way can a young man lose his worthy friends and lower himself in his own estimation so readily, as by crossing the threshold of the grog-shop and standing, a customer, at its bar, where the delusive beverage is exchanged for the half dime. Its very atmosphere is tainted with degradation. It is a snare baited with a sweet yet poisonous honey, and whoso goeth therein cometh out with loss of self-respect than when he entered for the first time. He loses confidence in himself and does not wonder that his friends desert him. And when self-respect is lost, there can be no estimate as to what depths of degradation the man will finally sink.

2. The groggery is the nearest way to a forfeiture of public esteem. Let it become known that a young man is in the habit of frequenting these abodes of sin and iniquity, that he steals in there when no one is watching him, that he comes out with a guilty look trying to cast off the shame of his own personal degradation, and how suddenly he sinks in public estimation! With all respectable people the mark, like that of Cain, is placed upon him; and those to whom he is bound by nature's ties weep over the wreck of his early promise.

3. The grog shop is the nearest way to blunted sensibilities and to a forfeiture of all that makes home happy and desirable. If the husband or father finds his way to the grog shop, his home becomes less and less attractive. The son who lingers in the stench of the bar room, cuts himself loose from parental control and scorns the solicitude and love of those who gave him life.

4. The groggery is the nearest way to the grave. Out from the grog shop a tide of human beings are marching with every day's sunlight, and the bloated corpses reek on its way with curses on their lips and the fire of madness in their awaken eye. A host of idolatrous pilgrims are beating down a highway to the grave along the nearest way.

5. Finally, it is the nearest way to poverty—the nearest way to shame—the nearest way to beggary—the nearest way to infamy—the nearest way to prison and the hangman's hill—the nearest way to physical imbecility—the nearest way to eternal moral ruin—the nearest way to—HELL! Aye, the rum hells above the turf are the vestibules of the chambers of night below; and the nearest way lies through the gaudy traps so skillfully baited with promised sweets. Young man, beware of going the Nearest Way, for death and hell stands at the end of that Way!"

Marriage a Hundred Years Ago.—

The following extract from the Gentleman's Magazine for 1850 may not be unint eresting to our readers:

Married, in June, 1750, Mr Wm. Boddie, a considerable farmer, Great Tosson, near Rothbury, in the country of Northumberland, to Miss Eleanor Shotton, an agreeable young gentlewoman of the same place.—The entertainment on the occasion was very grand, there being provided no less than 120 quarters of lamb, 64 quarters of veal, 20 quarters of mutton, a great quantity of beef, 12 hams, with a suitable number of chickens, &c., which was concluded with eight half ankers of brandy, made into punch, 12 dozen of cider, a great many gallons of wine, and 60 bushels of malt made into beer. The company consisted of 336 ladies and gentlemen, who concluded with the music of 25 fiddlers and pipers, and the whole was conducted with the utmost order and unanimity.

Lake Erie Graperies.

Kelly's Island has already become the leading vineyard of this country, and the area of grapes on that delightful island is rapidly extending. This is shown by the Assessor's facts and figures, which are duly spread out in that capital newspaper, the Sandusky Register. Its grapes and wines statistics are therefore authentic as well as gratifying.

We cannot reproduce the table of the Assessor, but present the totals and results for 1861. There [illegible] in that of the present and future of Kelly's island. Kelly's island, where grapes have been cultivated to some extent for twenty years, and where there never has been a single failure of a crop!

There have been set to grapes this Spring, 1862, acres; Spring of 1861, 119½ acres; amount previously set, 2121 acres (in bearing this year); making a total number of acres set, 4984.

From the 1221 acres in bearing last year and the wood on the trellis, there were produced 211,717 lbs.—made into wine, equals 10,257 gallons; 494,595 lbs. sold, amounting to $42,668, including the wine, which is estimated at 60 cents per gallon of juice when pressed in the Fall. Amount of grapes and wine, 42,668; add for 230,000 roots raised, valued at $6,351; and for 2,080,000 cuttings $3,061; making a grand total of $51,061.

None of the wine has been sold less than 30 cents this spring, and one-quarter of the whole amount at $1 per gallon. Grand total value of Grapes, Wine, Roots and Cuttings, from the growth of 1200 acres of Grapes in 1861—$51,060. These figures indicate the future of Kelly's Island.

Priests, Women, and Families.—

The Siecle has the following:—"A painful scene occurred at the Lyon railway station two days ago. Just as a train was about to start for Paris, a poor woman, nearly 70 years of age, apparently in the greatest mental distress, came to look for her grand-daughter, a young woman about 20 years of age, who had clandestinely left her home, and was going to Paris. She found the object of her search in a third-class carriage, and insisted on her alighting and returning home. The young woman refused, and expressed her determination not to return to her parents, and in that she was encouraged by a priest, under whose protection she appeared to be. All the grandmother's tears and entreaties were in vain; the young woman persisted in refusing to return, and the train started. However, when the station-master was informed that the fugitive was a minor, he sent a telegraphic despatch to Tarrgiers, ordering the gendarmes on duty to stop her and send her back to Lyon, which was done, and she was restored to her friends. It is asserted that the young woman is devout, and anxious to embrace a religious life. She had twice before attempted flight, and on the present occasion arrangements seem to have been made to facilitate her escape, as, on reaching the station at Lyon, she put herself under the protection of Abbe Gruel, superior of the Jesuits at that town, whom she met in the waiting-room. The abbe purchased her ticket and took his seat in the same carriage, and when the passengers' tickets were asked for by the way, he presented both his own and hers."

A Flattering Likeness.—A man of short stature, and most cadaverous countenance, with the peculiar expression now claimed by Mons. de Chenille as that of gorilla, purchased a property in a western county of Scotland, from whence he strictly excluded trespassers. Some one sent him a large monkey, which he kept about his place, and a boy having been entrusted with the delivery of a letter, and having found the monkey at the same house door, was some alarmed; so he threw down the letter and ran off. On his way down the avenue the boy met the new laird, who angrily demanded what he was doing there. "I had a letter for you, sir," says the boy. "Well, give it to me." "Ah, but I gave it to your son, sir," replies the trembling laddie. "My son, you little rascal; I have no son." "Weel, sir, I canna say for that, but he had an unco look o' yourist."

Beauty of an Aged Woman.—Let not the aged woman be the object of contempt. She is helpless as a child, but as a child she may be learning the lessons from her Heavenly Father. Her feeble step is trembling on the brink of the grave; but her hope may be firmly planted on the better shore, which lies beyond. Her eye is dim with suffering and tears; but her spiritual vision may be contemplating the gradual unfolding of the gates of eternal rest. Beauty has faded from her form, but angels in the world of light may be wearing a wreath of glory for her brow. Her lips is silent, but may be only waiting to pour forth celestial strains of gratitude and praise. Lonely and fallen and sad, she sits among the living; but sanctified purified and happy, she may rise from the dead.

Large Inheritance.—Mr. C. T. Tucker, of this place, we understand, is likely to come into full possession of the Lawrence estate in the Bank of England amounting to fifty million pounds, or nearly two hundred and fifty million dollars. This matter has been in litigation about fifteen years, and all the testimony necessary to establish the claim has finally been obtained. Lyman Lawrence of Manlyrian, who is a brother of Mr. Tucker's wife, was the legitimate heir, but made a full assignment to Mr. Tucker, who will have the full control of the vast estate. If this claim should be fully established he will be the richest man in America.—Decatur (Mich.) Tribune

A lovely young lady-rebel, named Jenny Green, has just been captured near Charlestown, Va. She was armed like a trooper, and swore like one, or more. She said she had killed lots of 6—6 Yankees, and meant to kill more, and upon the arrest of the sweet pepperidge buried through the cap of a Union captain who was questioning her. She is only eighteen, the fascinating creature!

The Federal Tariff.

(From the Times, July 11.)

There is something ridiculous, even to ghastliness, in the spectacle of the Americans dancing in the fetters they have imposed on their own trade, parading their own sores and mutilations, and praying to all their gods that the rest of the world may be in worse case than they are themselves. They are now offering a Te Deum because they hope they have shut out half the world, insulted themselves from Europe, brought famine to several millions of British, French and German firesides, and made the Atlantic ten times as wide to all practical purposes. We pass over the absurdity that they still hope to send us their breadstuffs, which we cannot do without, even while they expect to receive nothing in return. Of course we cannot buy their bread without money, and cannot get money without earning it by some trade or manufacture. So the American ideal of Europe as a vast poorhouse, in which the inmates shall have their daily loaves without doing a stroke of work, is not likely to be realised, unless, indeed, the Americans, in pure malice and wickedness, should send us twenty or thirty million quarters of corn every year, and refuse to take a dollar for them. No doubt, this would answer the desired purpose of degrading us into paupers, but the Americans are not in a condition to try so grand an experiment in the science of political and social economy. Indeed, the people who talk o' sending us corn and taking nothing in return are not the persons most concerned in the project—the corn-growers themselves. The "Revised Tariff" strikes its first and hardest blow at the Southern and Western States. It tells the American agriculturists in the vast interior that they shall henceforth buy and sell at prices dedicated by the manufactures of New York and the Atlantic States. It tells them that they sell their corn, cotton, sugar, and all other produce at the New York prices; and at New York prices, also, pay for every article they wear on their bodies, or use on their houses, their farms, their workshops, or on their railways. It rivets a collar on every American neck, with "New York" thereon inscribed, and a chain on every American hand and foot to fret the skin till it reach the bone. We grieve for them as well as for ourselves, for we see that much of this is inevitable, and that war can only be paid for by taxation. But we beg to assure our American contemporaries that, when they exult in the communication of their own miseries to all Europe, we see in their ecstacies only the aberrations of a mind and nature so thoroughly perverted that it can exclaim, "Evil, be thou my good."

The Rebellion in China.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Shanghae, April 20, says:—

"The rebellion is growing very formidable here, especially in the vicinity of Nanking, which city they still hold possession of, and defy the Imperialists to dislodge them. They have taken and burned several cities on the river this week. I witnessed several cities on fire between Nanking and Ghenkin, on our last trip up the Yang Tse River. The Government are taking steps now to drive them from the vicinity of Shanghae. We are engaged carrying troops (so called here) They look more like a company of fishermen to me, for each one carries a bamboo with a pike on the end, like a fish spear. I fear they will prove a poor match for the Taeping Rebels, for they are well armed, many of them, and a very determined people too. These Chinese are a new people. To think of a country like this, containing three hundred millions of people, without newspapers, steam railways, or telegraphs. They don't seem to take any interest in anything. If they don't look sharp they will lose Shanghae, for it certainly looks suspicious to see so many French and English men-of-war here all the time.

Lady Franklin was here a few days ago. She was received very kindly, but only stayed a few days. She has gone to Hong Kong by the last steamer. Mr Burlingame has just left here for Hae-Neo on his way to Pekin. He is a great favorite at Shanghae.

I nearly forget to mention that we had quite a little battle near Shanghae last week, between the rebels and the combined forces of English, French and Chinese, under Col. Ward, an American of some note in this place. The result was, they drove the rebels back, with a little loss on both sides. Admiral Hope the English Naval Commander on this station, got a musket-shot through his leg, which he thinks will not prove very serious.

Another Balloon Victim.

Winchester ascended in a balloon some five years since, at Milan, in Erie county, in this State, and neither balloon nor aeronaut have since been heard from. Thurston, at Monroe, Michigan, two or three years since, foolishly got astride of the neck of his balloon after it had descended, and the balloon accidently becoming free he was carried sky-ward, and, weeks after, crushed remains of a human being, nearly imbedded in the ground, were found, supposed to be those of the rash adventurer. Now another victim to aerial voyaging has been added to the list. F. H. Westbrook ascended on the Fourth for the amusement of the people gathered at Sparta, Morrow county, O. It would seem that Westbrook was the most fool-hardy of all these aeronauts. The Mt. Vernon Banner says:

The balloon was inflated, and, with Mr. Westbrook in the car, started from the earth between 4 and 5 p. m. It had not ascended more than three or four hundred feet, when it burst and turned inside out, and fell with rapid momentum, striking the ground about thirty rods from its starting point. The unfortunate aeronaut struck the ground feet foremost, his body going through the clean wicker-work of the steel bottom, and sinking to the depth of nearly two inches. He was immediately taken out of the car in a totally unconscious condition. One of the legs was broken—perhaps both—and the internal injuries to vital parts of his body and brain precluded all possibility of recovery. No human organization could endure such a dreadfully violent concussion. Several physicians were at hand, and rendered all the aid in their power. The balloon was absolutely rotten, and filled with hot air. Mr. Westbrook was well aware of the treacherous material, but, rather than disappoint the people by not ascending, he risked his life, and lost it. It was a terrible spectacle. Mr. W. was thirty-four years of age. He resided in Chester township, Morrow county. He leaves a wife and one child.

—Almost a million and a half bushels of grain were shipped from New York lately for Europe, besides 32,432 barrels of flour. This is a fine fact, considering that Europe is at peace while we have a civil war that employs something like a mill on of men.

SEPARATE SCHOOLS.

The education by the State of the people is considered in Canada as a desideratum. Anything tending to promote or impair the efficiency of that education is anxiously watched by the friends of public education, and it is especially the province of the press, of statesmen and patriots, to sound an alarm when an acknowledged public institution such as our Common School system is in danger, either from outward enemies or inside friends. This must be our excuse for again alluding to those Schools, which tho' covertly pretending to advance the cause of educatica, are, nevertheless, we firmly believe, destined to overthrow our cherished system of Common School education.

"Dr. Ryerson's second letter in reply to three weeks attack of the Globe," appeared a short time ago in the Leader. It contains an assumption that, possibly, none else but the writer will admit; that in his previous letter he has shown "that there is no more danger to our public School system throughout the Townships and Counties of Upper Canada from Separate School Legislation, than there is of an invasion of the United States by Canada."

Now, we had always supposed that our national School system was one, both in the town as well as the country, but our worthy Superintendent gives us to understand that Separate School legislation does not effect the country—implying that it may in the Towns and Cities—and that there is a system for the latter as well as one for the former. He says, moreover, that although Episcopalians and Catholics, severally, clamoured for Separate Schools, Schools, that now "both parties have ceased their opposition to the School system itself." That "there is not a ripple of agitation for Separate Schools in the Townships of Upper Canada among the entire Protestant population, and none for the principle of their extension even among the Roman Catholics." If these sentences had been penned by almost any other individual than the Chief Superintendent of Upper Canada, we might have been willing to accept of some excuse for such apparently hap-hazard expression; but for a man whose official position for the last 18 years has given him so many opportunities of knowing better, it is passing strange how he could bring himself down to write such palpable untruths. Such has been the determination of Catholics to obtain their Separate Schools, that they have succeeded in getting the principle of their existence incorporated into the public common School System. The desire and determination of Catholics to have these schools established is as strong to-day as it ever has been, in the country as well as the town, and nothing prevents their establishment in every Township in Upper Canada where there are Catholics, but the legal difficulties in the way of support. The law exists, sanctioning their establishment, and where there are sufficient numbers together to support a teacher, a separate school is established, or, as is the case in some localities, the Common School so called, is to all intents and purposes, as far as religious teaching is concerned, a Separate School.

When the religious element is advocated as a necessary appendage to a State system of education in a country like Canada, there necessary will be a clamour for Separate Schools. These, when granted to one religious body, cannot, in justice and fair play, be denied to another. This is precisely the situation we are in at present. The Church of England has, for years, clamoured for Separate Schools for her youth—not for the lower classes as Dr. Ryerson has framed his Bill, but for the entire body—they have insisted upon their right to have schools similar to the Roman Catholics, and we do not see how that demand can be rightfully refused.

If one religious body complains of the conscientious scruples of its youth being endangered by religious teaching in the Common School, why may not another and then by the unwise introduction of a religious element into a School system, intended for such a diversified religious population as Canada has, we are in a fair way of losing the system we now have, and having in its stead a denominational one.

If we are sincere in wishing to preserve our Common School system, we must go back to first principles, and insist upon a purely secular system of education in our Common Schools. The religious part of the education of our youth belongs to the parent and religious teacher. As Dr. Ryerson himself said to the people of Canada in his Report of Education for 1858: "The State aids the parents in the teaching of their children the secular subjects of a necessary education, during six or seven hours of each day; but the religious part of the education of children, as well as their food and clothing, and their education during more than two-thirds of each week day, and the whole of Sunday, must rest exclusively with parents and their clergy, who, both by the injunctions of Scripture and their respective books of faith and discipline, are required to teach their children their catechisms, and bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Yet this same individual in four years later says: "There is no danger from Separate Schools—it is right for the State to assist religious bodies to teach their modes of faith in the day schools." But there is no end to the shiftings and dodgings of this chameleon Superintendent—he can build up and throw down, blow hot and cold at the same breath—can affirm and deny the same statements, and it is all right—he never was wrong, and will survive all opposition, and defy all and every one who seeks to cross his path. It is clear to those who who have closely marked his course since his introduction into his present official position, that his change of opinions from the secular to the religious training of youth in the day schools, is easily traceable to his endeavours to despoil the National University. Being a chief originator, and an untiring upholder of his denominational College at Cobourg, his efforts for some years past have been directed to obtain, by hook or by crook, a portion of the endowment of the Toronto University for Victoria College, and hence we now find the stress which is laid by him on religious teaching and a "christian education." His aim is, and will be to get the other larger bodies to join in the affiliation scheme, so that real danger is to be apprehended from the attempts made already. At the last meeting of the Anglican Synod it transpired that the venerable Bishop who has since the establishment of Trinity College kept aby of Toronto University, during a debate on the affiliation scheme of Colleges with the University, was reported to have said: "What we want for our College is not affiliation but money." And this will be found to be the leading want with all. Public moneys for denominational Colleges, and which Egerton Ryerson is helping them to get, as he wants it for Victoria College.

A very general dissatisfaction is being felt, and justly, so we think, at the continuance in office of an individual so beset upon the destruction of our Common Schools and our noble College, as the present Superintendent of Education. His assistance in getting up Separate School Bills, and his openly avowed advocacy of dividing the funds of the University among Denominational Colleges is proof positive of the charges so frequently made of his malversation in educational matters, warranting his removal from the high position he so unworthily occupies.

As a corroboration of the statement we advanced of the determination of the Church of England to have her Separate Schools, we append the remarks of the Brantford Courier, an out and out Tory journal, which praises the venerable Doctor for his "plasticity." Ah! the Doctor is very good while framing our Separate School Bills—very obliging: fine old man is Dr. Ryerson now. But now for the article:

"The public are well aware that great dissatisfaction is entertained by many persons against the position in which the children of our towns and cities especially are placed, in respect to their daily education; contending that religious instruction should be regularly and consecutively incorporated with their secular learning. Therefore great efforts have been made for years to obtain from parliament the power to establish Separate Schools which should be under the immediate control and instruction of the churches. The Roman Catholics, it is well known, have gained this point, and receive Government aid for their schools which are conducted on the religious principle. The Church of England feels just as much entitled to this boon as the Roman Catholic Church, and has been loud and emphatic in her demands for the change. The Synod of Toronto spoke out in the most decided manner, and the Diocese of Huron would doubtless have done the same had not its business proceedings been so tedious that the question had to be postponed. It seems evident that public opinion is changing, and that from certain quarters at least a tremendous pressure will be brought to bear against the purely secular character of our public schools; and the undenominational if not godless, character of our Provincial University. The Chief Superintendent, Dr. Ryerson, with his usual sagacity, perceives the tendency of the public, and is shaping his course accordingly,—bending to the storm he is willing, it appears, to grant the boon to cities and towns, and also to sanction a scheme of denominational affiliation with Toronto University. For this plasticity on his part the Toronto Globe waxes tremendously irate, and says a great many naughty things about the venerable Doctor. This course provoked a lengthy reply from Dr. Ryerson, which has been met by a tremendous editorial in the Globe of no less than three and a half columns! As usual the Globe must be abusive and personal, and the principle of the question seems to be abandoned, therefore, for the purpose of trying to prove Dr. Ryerson inconsistent. This, however, is not what will settle the matter; the question has been theoretically considered by the Churches of England and Rome, discussed upon its absolute merits, and those denominations have decided against the purely secular learning of our Common Schools; the opponents of the premises had sought for change must trust it in like manner or must expect to be beaten,—for abuse is not argument, nor personal invective sound reason."—Brantford Courier.

☞ The Canadian Statesman in an article on the University Question alludes to the treachery of the Superintendent for Upper Canada on this and other public matters, and urges his dismissal from office. Our contemporary commits a rather glaring blunder in spelling the Christian name of this notable character. No less than four times he spells it Edgerton, whereas it ought to be Egerton—a small difference yet an important one.

Dedication.

The new Orange Hall of Lodge No. 49 was on Tuesday last opened, with Worshipful District Master, Brother George Blake, presiding; assisted by Brother Colwell, of Peterboro; there were a large number of spectators present. The ceremony of dedication being over the company retired a short distance from the Lodge room to a large Booth, where the tables groaned under the good things that had been prepared by the ladies of Otonabee; they deserve great credit for the manner in which they had everything prepared in such nice apple pie order. Refreshments being over the speakers took their seats on the platform, who were Rev. Bros. Colwell and Johnston, the Hon. S. Smith, and Thos. Short Esq., with W. D. M. Blake presiding—Success to 49!

We were disappointed at not seeing our worthy Member present, but the adjoining note will explain why he was absent:

Peterboro, 30th July, 1862.

To Alexander Graham Esq.

Dear Sir,—I have to express much regret at not being been present at the Dedication of a new Orange Hall, in Otonabee, on Tuesday, having accepted your kind invitation to do. I had mistaken the day on which the ceremony was to take place.

Believe me,
Faithfully yours,
Fred. W. Haultain.

School Examination at Lakefield.

The School at Lakefield, taught by Mr. John Rae, was examined on Friday last, in presence of the Trustees, the Rev. J. S. Douglas, Peterboro', and a number of the parents, who showed by their presence, their desire for their children's education. The classes were examined in reading, spelling, and the elder ones also in meanings, in which they acquitted themselves very creditably. The classes in Arithmetic and Geography showed themselves quite at home in these subjects. But the class in History particularly pleased all the visitors. The King's and Queen's of England, with the principal events in the History of the Country and the Genealogy of Queen Victoria, were given down to the Reformation with great accuracy. The Grammar had to be omitted for want of time. Several of the pupils distinguished themselves, and received the best prize of learning, the praise of diligence and success; among whom were Masters Knox, and McGregor, and Misses Rae and Waite McGregor particularly distinguished himself in Arithmetic. The scholars were addressed by Messrs. Waite, Nicol and Douglas, each of whom spoke highly of Mr. Rae's success, both in managing and sustaining his pupils; the scholars were urged to perseverance and the parents to aid in keeping them regularly at school. After prayer all departed highly satisfied with the mental feast provided for them in the comfortable Schoolroom of that apparently thriving village; giving proof of the saying, "It is the People that make the place.

Skedaddle.

We are in a fair way of arriving at the definition of this puzzling term. We reproduce the following which we clip from an exchange. The Swedish and Danish words from which the Americans borrow the new term, and from whence we obtain "scud," convey the best meaning we have yet seen, when applied to an army running away—"to flee; to run away with precipitation," a la Bull Run.

The Historical Magazine for the current month says that this word may be easily traced to a Greek origin, and that the original word is used by at least two great historians, in reporting the dispersion of routed armies. A correspondent of the Magazine thus speaks of skedaddle:

"It is of both Swedish and Danish origin, and has been in common use for several years through the Northwest, in the vicinity of immigrants from those nations. It is Americanized only in orthography; the Swedes spelling it 'skuddle lohl,' while the Danes spell 'skyededheh!,' both having precisely the same signification. This phrase is also becoming Indianized, at least among the Sioux, who frequently use it in place of their word 'ha-a-chee,' which signifies 'clear out,' 'go off,' &c. I will also add that the Swedes use the word skudda, and the Danes the word skyede, in the same sense as we the word 'scud.'"

General Halleck has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Federal army. It is said that a conscription must be resorted to in order to fill up the vacancies occasioned by the great loss in killed, wounded, captured and sick. The volunteer movement, notwithstanding the large bounties offered both by the States and the Government, will not suffice to supply the requisite number of men. Without reinforcements it is thought that it will be impossible to succeed in subjugating the South.

A much more formidable enemy is Confederacy than the North, would admit until now, and it will be humiliating in the extreme for the North to be compelled to acknowledge an independent power of a part of their own nation, as Great Britain had to do in her case some 85 years ago.

We received a communication from "A hearer" giving a very graphic account of the lecture of Mr. Dunlop, on Tuesday night, and which we are sorry to say we have not been able to insert, owing to other matter crowding upon us. We regret being prevented from attending on Tuesday night, as we learn from some of those present that it was a very attractive lecture, and Mr. Dunlop in perfect master of his subjects. Don't let the admirers of the art of good delivery forget that Mr. Dunlop lectures and reads to-night, in the Town Hall, at 8 o'clock:

☞ There is to be a grand Excursion and Pic-Nic on Rice Lake on Friday next, 1st of August. The steamer Forest City with a large barge attached will leave Hastings at 8 o'clock a. m., and call at different places on the shores of Rice Lake and arrive at the beautiful island opposite Gore's Landing about noon, where refreshments, &c., will be served. The boat and barge will return to Hastings, calling at the different stations on the route, early in the evening.

☞ The Cobourg Annual Regatta for 1862 will take place on Thursday and Friday, 7th and 8th August next.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

Letter No. 6.

LONDON (Continued.)

We resume our notes on London, and in doing so will again seek the assistance of our Guide Book:

Next to the Exhibition, because most convenient in location, are the Gardens of the Horticultural Society, established in 1860. They are situated to the north of the Palace. The conservatory is remarkably neat, but low, it is said, too much light for the plants, a fault which is particularly modern. It has a curvilinear roof, formed entirely of light iron, and glazed with patent sheet glass.

Kensington Museum was founded in 1852. The special objects for which this Department is now organized are:—As respects science, to encourage the study of certain practical sciences which have a direct influence on manufactures, by aiding the salaries of certificated teachers, giving Queen's prizes for success, and paying the teachers, on successful results. As respec Art:—1. To train male and female teachers, to certify them when qualified, and to make them annual fixed payments, varying according to their acquirements. 2. To aid and assist local committees desirous of establishing Schools of Art. 3. To hold public inspections and examinations and to award medals and prizes to the most deserving candidates. 4. To collect together works of art, pictures, &c., in the central Museum, and books and engravings in the central Library. 5. To circulate among the schools of art objects from the Museum, and books and engravings, &c., from the Library

Kensington Gardens, quite adjacent, are about one mile and a-half in circumference, and form a delightful promenade in the summer months.

Kensington Palace is a plain edifice, like most of the Royal mansions in London. The exterior off a nothing remarkable in in architecture, but the interior is spacious, comfortable and very well for what it is intended. It is built of red brick. The principal entrance is on the west. The grand staircase and the ceilings are from designs by Kent. The apartments, generally furnished with much taste, are decorated with choice pictures of ancient masters, such as those of Leonardo da Vinci, Holbein, and other celebrated artists. This palace contains a magnificent library, constantly open to men of letters.

The Bank of England is a vast edifice, pretenting to the mind the idea of solidity mixed with heaviness, of grace and elegance with an ill-taste profusion of ornaments, and a good application of ancient architecture to modern use. The building presents everywhere imitations of Greek and Roman architecture; and as it was built at different epochs, by three different architects, it offers a strange mixture of these two respective orders. The first portion of this vast building was opened for business, June 1st, 1734, but was soon found insufficient for the immense and increasing business of the Bank; and some neighbouring houses were purchased to increase its dimensions. In 1788 Sir John Soane was appointed architect, and to him are due the principal ornaments, particularly the rotunda, a fine octagonal hall, 57 feet in diameter, surmounted by a dome.—The court-room, the pay-hall, the different offices, the vestibule, the governor's apartments, directors', cashiers' &c.,' employ eleven hundred clerks. The arrangements are most perfect; and nothing can surpass the order and regularity of this colossal establishment, which is perhaps the most important in the world. The salaries of the clerks, porters, engravers, printers, &c., employed in the Bank, vary from £50 at the age of 17, and increase yearly till they reach a maximum of £260; the average of the whole being about £225. They are promoted according to seniority. There are also about 200 super-annuated pensioners, receiving on an average not less than £200 a year each. The allowance to the directors is altogether about £8,000 a year. The accounts of the Bank, which, during the first year of its existence, were kept in an ordinary ledger, now fill 300 such volumes daily, so that the mere book-binding carried on within its walls is no ordinary business. In the vestibule is a curious clock, which, by ingeniously contrived mechanism, indicates the hour in sixteen different offices where dials are placed. On the great hall is a fine marble statute of William III., by whom the Bank was founded.

The Royal Exchange. This building stands nearly due east and west. Its extreme length is 308 feet; the front on the east is 175 feet in length, and that of the west 119 feet; the merchants' area is 170 feet by 112; the height of the tower to the top of the vane is 178 feet. The principal entrance is by the western front, under a portico of eight Corinthian columns which is surmounted by thirteen gradiite steps. The eastern entrance is under the tower, and on the north and south there are entrances to the merchants' area. In the tower is a peal of seventeen bells for the chimes, cast by Mr. Mears; and the clock was constructed by Mr. Dent. The ceiling of the merchants' area is divided by beams and panelling, highly painted and decorated in encaustic, by Frederick Sang. In the centre of each panel, on the four sides, the arms of the nations are repeated, emblazoned in their proper colours; and in the four angles are the arms of Edward the Confessor, Edward III., Queen Elizabeth, and Charles II. The principal floor is occupied by Lloyd's, the Royal Exchange Assurance, and other companies; and contains several magnificent apartments. In the centre of the quadrangle is a statute of Queen Victoria. Opposite the western front is a fine equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington, cast by Chantrey, from cannon taken by the enemy in the different battles he fought.

At the corner of Lombard Street, and in Mansion House Place is the Mansion House, the official residence of the Lord Mayor during the term of his mayoralty. The building occupies the site of a market, and was began in 1739, by elder Dance. It is built of Portland stone, and has a portico of six lofty fluted Corinthian columns in front. The basement story is rustic, and on each side are steps leading to the portico, in the centre of which is the principal entrance. The pediment is ornamented with an emblematic bas-relief, by Sir Robert Taylor, intended to represent the dignity and opulence of the City of London.

Guildhall, or the Hall in which the Corporation of the City meet, was built originally in the year 14431, but being greatly damaged by the fire of 1666, the present edifice, with the exception of the front, was erected in its place. The gothic front, erected in 1789, from the designs of Mr. Dance, consists of three divisions, separated by fluted pilasters; and above, in the centre are the City arms. The portico leads to what is called the great Halls, and is 153 feet in length, by 48 feet in width, and 51 feet in height. Six or seven thousand persons may be accomodated in this hall. To the east of the hall is a raised platform on which the Lord Mayor, aldermen, sheriffs, and other members of the corporation sit. On the windows of this platform appear the royal arms, the ensigns of the Orders of the Bath, Garter, Thistle, and St. Patrick, and the arms of the City, which are well executed upon painted glass. The monuments of Earl Chatham, and his son the Right Hon. William Pitt, Lord Nelson and Alderman Beckford are placed here. On each side of the west window, on pedestals, are the figures of the Giants Gog and Magog. In the Council Chamber is a good collection of paintings, several of which were presented by Alderman Boydell; a fine marble statute of George III., by Chantrey; and a beautiful picture of the Queen, by Hayter, presented to the Corporation in remembrance of the visit of Her Majesty, in 1837.

The General Post Office.—This magnificent building was commenced in 1825, from designes by Sir Robert Smirke, and finished in 1829. Its total length is 400 feet, and its width 87 feet. The centure is ornamented with a portico of the Ionic order, having 74 feet in length by 21 in width. It consists of six fluted columns of Portland stone, which are on pedestals of granite and sustain a triangular pediment, behind no which we read the following inscription: Georgio quarto rege, MDCCCXXIX.

The ground floor is appropriated to offices; the first floor to the board-room and the secretary's offices; and the second and third floors to sleeping rooms for the clerks of the foreign-office and for servants.

The General Post Office in London is said to be one of the best conducted establishments in Europe.

The National Gallery, in Trafalgar Square, was erected in 1837, from designs by Mr. Wilkins. The gallery, which is nearly 500 feet in length, consists of a centre and two wings. The centre is surmounted by a dome and ornamented with a portico, for which the beautiful Corinthian columns once adorning Carlton Palace have been used. This place stood formerly on the site of the Duke of York's Column, between Waterloo Place and St. James's Park. These columns are raised on a base, which produces a beautiful effect. The wings consists of two double columns which sustain a pediment and small dome. The west wing is devoted to the pictures which form the National Gallery, and that on the east to the Royal Academy. This edifice was opened in 1838.

The British Museum, which was established in 1735, by an act of Parliament accepting the will of Sir Hans Sloane, who directed that on his death his books, manuscripts, and collections, both of art and natural history, should be offered to the nation for £20,000, to be paid by the government to the executors of his will. Although Sir Hans Slone must be considered as the founder of this museum, it would be unjust, however, not to mention, Sir Robert Cotton, who was more generous than he, by presenting to the nation his very valuable collection of manuscripts. Such is the commencement of this splendid institution, which little by little, has risen to its present grandeur, by donations, legacies and purchases of all kinds of curiosities in animals, plants, fossils, minerals, sculptures, books, manuscripts, &c.

The building in which the library and collections are now deposited was commenced in 1825, and completed in 1861. Now that the works are finished, the British Museum is unquestionably the grandest national establishment in the metropolis, and one of the first in Europe.

The Zoological Gardens are situated on the north-east of Regent's Park, and since they have been opened to the public, in 1828, these gardens are one of the most frequented resorts. They were formed in 1827. Beside the attraction they offer in a scientific point of view, it is an excellent place for promenades. The animals are exhibited in paddocks, dens, and aviaries, furnished with iron railings, suited to their various habits. Lions, leopards, wolves, panthers, bears, apes monkeys and baboons: beavers, eagels, ostriches and a great variety of other animals are to be seen there. The Band of the Horse Guards performs on certain days of the week in the Gardens. In Arthur Street, East is the Grert Monument commenced in 1677. This noble piece of architecture consists in a fluted column of the Doric order. Its entire height is 202 feet. This beautiful national monument was erected by the celebrated architect Sir Christopher Wren. It is situated on the sight where stood formerly the parish church of St. Margaret's, and was raised by order of Parliament in commemoration of the great fire in 1666 which destroyed so great a part of the city of London. The pedestal doome alone is 42 feet in height and the diameter of the shaft of the column is 15 feet. It is nearly 30 feet higher than the Column of Antoninus at Rome, 45 feet higher than that of Trajan also at Rome, and upwards of 65 feet higher than the Column Vendome in Paris. Consequently it is the highest column in the world. Within the column is a staircase of black marble, consisting of 345 steps, by which access can be had to the iron balcony, from which a prospect of the vast metropolis and the surrounding scenery is obtained. In the centre of the capital a moulded cylinder, 32 feet in height, is erected, which supports a blazing urn of gilt bronze, of ten feet high.

On three sides of the pedestal there are inscriptions that on the north side gives a description of the frightful event which reduced the city to ashes; that on the south records the activity with which the metropolis was rebuilt under the auspices of King Charles II.; and that on the east bears the names of the principal magistrates of London, who were in office during the erection of the monument. The basso-relievo, on the west side, representing the King affording protection to the desolated city, and freedom to its new rebuilders, inhabitants, &c. was sculptured by Cibber, the father of the poet of that name.

In our next we will continue the notes on London, giving a description of the Tower of London, the Thames Tunnel, and other objects of interest.

For the Examiner.

Mr. Editor,—In your issue of the 17th I noticed a communication relative to the Orange demonstration in Norwood, in which the writer regrets not being in possession of the noble art of Phonography so that he could perform the agreeable task of giving your readers a verbatim report of the speech delivered on that occasion by Col Haultain, M. P. P. It is a loss which many of us have deeply felt on being placed in a similar position, when the speaker had succeeded in diverting our attention and leading us captive at will, then we realized and tried to remember the subject, but when on retiring, alas! it was gone from our memories, doubtless never to return on this side of the grave. Had we been in possession of the art of writing by sound, we could have obviated the difficulty and left the public in possession of valuable addresses.

My object in coming before your readers is not to open a warfare on our common long head because it does not come up to the requirements of the age, but to stimulate the friends of Phonography to renewed energy. I think that were you to devote a portion of your valuable paper to the dissemination of Phonography it would greatly enhance the value of it. I have studied Phonography to a considerable extent but have not mastered it thoroughly. I would like to see the friends of Phonography brought into closer intimacy with each other. Not wishing to try your patience too much I will close with the beautiful lines of the poet:

"God bless this land, and bless us all
With wisdom, we beseech,
And sweet benevolence will bless be
As feet and free as speech."

Geo. McKewen, Jr.

Otonabee, 22nd July, 1862.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Mr. Editor,—It is a sorrowful fact that in this the nineteenth century, so free from any national contamination whatever, as this Canada of ours is, that so honorable a body as that of the Loyal Orange Institution should be so far back in literature, fine arts, and sciences, as they really are.

It is true we have amongst us some men of superior talent, and who stand second to none in the high and refined arts and sciences. But how often we find, while conversing with some of our brethren, that few are able to argue their own points regarding the reasonableness of joining the illustrious order of Orangeism. Few, indeed, are prepared to tell, if asked, when or where it was first organized, or, in fact, able to tell what countryman the founder was.—Some actually have the opinion that King William III. must, and could be no other than an Irishman; now the most of the Roman Catholics are better posted in the matter more than this, and understand history much better.

Then, under these considerations it would be well to connect some plan in which all could and would be greatly benefitted thereby, not only the aristocrats of the order but the poorer in particular. Knowing many thousands of them to be upright, honest and sound-hearted protestants and orangemen in every sense of the word, but who had not the facilities when young that we have now-a-days, from want of proper means of education, to post themselves in reading matter, who now in their leisure moments can very comfortably peruse some useful works obtainable from some near hand source. This and this alone will prove an antidote for those pernicious habits so plentifully scattered broadcast through our fair land, to devour the unsuspecting traveller who would read by give his home an hour of his presence sooner than spend the me time in frivolity and nonsence. But some will say that scheme will never work. Work! why not work? I am speaking of the protestant community, and in particular the orange body, who if honest to themselves, their country and Queen, will endeavor to seek knowledge.

How many of our private lodges through this country which do not spend twenty-five dollars during the year in what is almost needless, or at least could be done without, and which, if applied properly, would procure a fine, respectable collection of books suitable for the members to read, and thereby be improved. In the mean time it is only my intention to show the necessity there is in having an intelligent body of Orangemen in our land.

Of course it is expected that we as a body of men should be ever ready to defend ourselves from scandal whenever thrust on us. 'Tis true, indeed, there are those of whom we are proud to have enrolled with us able for the task, but few in comparison to what ought to be from the number of members in this province, and every man should be ready to wield back every blow that may be aimed at us through whatever form, whether from the Legislative halls or through the press, or in any other form. Let not our institution be trampled on, for be it known that our enemy appears in many forms, and very often in the persons of would be sound protestants. But well meaning and sound thinking men will at once conclude that those are only a prejudiced part of the protestant community.—But how soon would all those be cast in the shade were every man posted in his business of argument for the right, or well versed in history, either ancient or modern, from authenticated works which could easily be obtained from any bookseller in the province.

Many of the brethren from the mother country who have found a comfortable and happy home amongst us are well posted in the traditions of their ancestors, and can tell of their daring exploits and awful sufferings, and deadly feuds with their oppressors. But that is not enough for their children or for the present generation, for their wants can and will only be supplied from the fountain of the press. How much better for all would it be for every one of us to be prepared with historical facts, not that of mere traditions of the past. Indeed we are inclined to think that the protestants of Canada are having their eyes blinded, and are made the veriest dupes of cunning office seekers, who are ready at any time to sacrifice every principle to gain their mercenary end. But our eyes must open and shake off the shackles of duplicity from us and stand as free men, and allow none to trample on our most sacred privileges.

Not long ago the writer was in conversation with a certain man when he spoke as follows, (now mark his sentiments): "The Orange body in general must be led by the highest in office, no matter what his political views may be, because they are knowingly not cute enough to judge for themselves." Of course we have a right to differ in opinion, and I do not think as my brother thinks on this subject, for I believe we are a free body, and a body too who never will be trampled upon by any party or section, for surrender we never will, and God has given us that great boon, liberty of conscience, and with His help we will hold fast to that better part which can not be taken from us.

One more remark in conclusion, and that is just so soon as the body in general makes an opening for knowledge in their lodge rooms, then peace and prosperity will reign within her borders, and the temple she remains without making the effort, the sooner her decay will approach.

Collision on Lake Ontario.

The Kingston News of yesterday gives the following account of a collision which occurred on Tuesday morning between the steamers Passport and Empress, of the royal mail through line:

"The Passport was on her way up the lake, having left Kingston at one o'clock in the morning, being then delayed beyond her usual hour of departure by heavy weather; and the Empress was coming down the lake on her regular trip, and was making for this port. The accident occurred at about 9 o'clock in the morning, when just off the False Ducks lighthouse. The Passport had her larboard wheel completely crushed in and destroyed, the paddleshaft sprung somewhat, and she was completely disabled. The Empress had her bow stove in, and sprung a leak forward, which, however could be kept under by the pumps. After the accident the Empress made for the shore and checked the leakage forward by wrapping mats, &c., round the stem. The Passport was left to shift for herself until assistance was rendered by the schooner Mazo, whose captain witnessed the accident and bore down to the scene of the collision.—The steamer Huron subsequently came up and towed the Passport back to Kingston, where she arrived about nine o'clock. The Empress after making the temporary repairs on Duck Island shore was able to reach Kingston without further assistance. Both these steamers were heavily laden with passengers, and it is a providential escape that the collision was not attended with more serious results. The Passport had on board 600 souls, many of the passengers being German emigrants en route for the west. The Empress had about eighty people on board. Nobody was injured.

"There are two explanations of the manner in which the accident occurred, each by the officers of the different steamers, and each tending to extenuate their respective vessels from blame. Captain Harbottle, of the Passport was at his post in the morning and saw the Empress at a distance of ten miles of. The Passport whistled three times; but he heard no return whistle, probably because the wind, which was adverse, prevented him; though he is of opinion that there was no officer on the deck of the Empress to attend to the usual except the wheelsman. Both vessels at this time were in parallel lines, the Passport bearing toward the Ducks and the Empress bearing toward Nine Mile Point. Captain Harbottle, in consequence of a difficulty previously experienced by the steamer Champion in passing the Empress, deemed it prudent to port the helm and give a wider berth to the Empress. The affair of the Champion is assigned as the sole reason for the Passport changing her course. The captain states that after altering his course he found that the Empress had also changed her course and was bearing down upon the Passport. He ordered the helm to be a second time put aport, but soon found that a collision was inevitable, and in order to receive the shock upon the most favorable part of the ship, he stopped the engine, but just before the collision ordered her to be moved ahead, and so received the blow upon the paddle near the centre, the Empress striking stem on nearly a right angle with the Passport. The force of the collision was much softened to both vessels by the Empress striking a recessively upon the guards and breaking through the frame work of the wheel. To this circumstance may be attributed the safety of both vessels. The Empress rounded by the stern of the Passport, and just touched the shore to secure her from the danger that was apprehended, and after securing her bow proceeded to Kingston.

"The mate of the Empress, who was on duty, states that he was at his post on deck, and saw the lights of the Passport. He maintains that his own vessel was on her proper course and that if the Passport had kept on her original course, which he claims was to the southward of the Empress, the Empress would have passed her on the larboard hand. The mate claims that the Passport, when it was too late, changed her course to port, in order to pass on the right side, and thus brought about the collision.

"The captain of the schooner Mazo corroborates the statement of Captain Harbottle in reference to the course of the Empress; he forms his opinion by the changed position of the lights of the Empress.

"The passengers of the Passport were forwarded by the Champion last evening, and those of the Empress had their money regard the life of a soldier as valueless, and by some unfortunate mistake has been appointed a surgeon in the army. The hospital is within the jurisdiction of General Grant, who has always been indifferent to the condition of his sick soldiers. An appeal to him would be fruitless. As Dr. Holston is from Ohio, the Ohio troops are in the hospital, will not the State authorities be justified in investigating the complaint? If the hospital is as represented, the sooner its Medical Director is out of the service the better.

Incidents of the Late Battle-field.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post writes the following incidents of late battles before Richmond:

The scenes of the battle-field are both touching and interesting.

While the engagement goes on and a man here and there falls, one wounded and another dead, the dead body is left lying in the position in which it fell, the soldier sometimes grasping his half-loaded musket and reared, or loaded and aiming as if to again discharge it; another dying after a few minutes' or an hour's consciousness, with hands clasped on any little keepsake lying upon his bosom, as if his last word and breath had been a prayer for the loved ones away.

The wounded, if their injuries are slight are allowed to walk away, or, if more serious, one or two comrades lay down their arms and lead him off, until met by the stretcher-bearers, when they are laid upon the stretcher and taken to the ambulance in waiting in a protected spot, to take them to the place selected as a temporary hospital, where surgeons are in attendance to receive them.

Here, then, come the trying scenes. The physician discriminates between those mortally wounded and those who will probably live, and the operations are affecting in the extreme.

One mortally wounded soldier asks, "Doctor, what do you think of my case, is it dangerous?" With a feeling which brings tears to the eyes of men of the stoutest hearts, the Doctor replies, both for the surgeon and the spiritual adviser, that there is little or no hope, and the soldier closes his eye for a few moments in despair, then rallying, he looks earnestly for a sympathising friend, and earnestly makes the same inquiry.

Major Barnum, of the Twelfth New York was mortally wounded, and while lying breathing his last a friend asked him if he had any message, to which he replied; "Tell my wife that in my last thoughts were blended my wife, my boy and my flag." He asked of the physician how the battle went, and when told that it was favorable to us, he said, "God bless the old flag—," and expired with the prayer finishing inaudibly with his closing lips. A braver officer never urged his men to gallantry.

I met one soldier with a ball through his leg and bleeding to death sorely and rapidly.

"Oh," said he, "what will Mrs. Ellis and Jennie do? Poor William is dead—how his mother and sister loved him; and he would have enlisted if I had not. O dear, O dear!"

And, beseeching me to take a message to them, said: "Poor Mrs. Ellis; poor me, I have no mother and sister to weep for me—I might as well fight those wicked Rebels as not."

Another, shot through the lungs, clasped a locket to his breast and moved his lips till I put down my ear and listened for his last breath:

"You'll tell her, won't you?"

Tell who or where I could not ask, but the locket was the picture of one who might be wife, sweetheart or sister.

At one place, apart from the rest, men were carried to have legs and arms amputated. At three different times I saw parties of men carrying away the amputated limbs for burial. When the battle is over, details of men from each regiment go over the field and pick up and recognize the bodies of the dead, carrying them to a convenient place, and lying them face to the enemy ready for burial.

Distinctions in the Grave.

Bishop Thomas, of Salisbury, used to relate the following story:—

While I was chaplain in the British factory at Hamburg, a gentleman belonging to the factory died at a village about ten miles distant. Application was made to the parson of the parish to have him buried in his churchyard; but upon being told he was a Calvinist, he refused.

"No," said he, "there are none but Lutherans in my churchyard, and there shall be no other."

This being told me, said Dr. Thomas, I resolved to go and argue the matter with him, but found him inflexible. At length I told him he made me think of a circumstance that happened to myself when I was a curate in Thames street. I was burying a corpse when a woman came up and pulled me by the sleeve, in the midst of the service saying,

"Sir, sir, I want to speak to you."

"Prithee, wait my good woman until I have done."

"No, sir, I must speak to you immediately."

"Why, then, what is the matter?"

"Sir, you are burying a man who had the small pox next to my poor husband, who never had it."

The story had the desired effect, and the curate permitted the bones of the Calvinist to rot in his churchyard.

A Delightful Legend.

There is a charming tradition connected with the site on which the temple of Solomon was erected. It is said to have been occupied in common by two brothers, one of whom had a family; the other had none. On this spot was sown a field of wheat. On the evening succeeding the harvest, the wheat having been gathered in separate shocks, the elder brother said to his wife, "My younger brother is unable to bear the burden and heat of the day; I will arise, take off my shocks, and place with his, without his knowledge." The younger brother being actuated by the same benevolent motives, said within himself, "My elder brother has a family, and I have none; I will arise, take off my shocks, and place with his, without his knowledge." Judge their mutual astonishment, when on the following morning, they found their respective shocks undiminished. This course of events transpired for several nights when each resolved in his own mind to stand guard and solve the mystery. They did so; when on the following night they met each other half way between their respective shocks with their arms full. Upon ground hallowed by such associations as this, was the temple of Solomon erected—so spacious and magnificent, the wonder and admiration of the world. Also in these days how many would sooner steal their brother's whole stock than add to it a single sheaf!

—A severe storm visited Buffalo on Wednesday morning, blowing down the tower of a new church in course of construction, killing one man and injuring four others.

For the Examiner.

North Monaghan Intellectual Improvement Society.

Three meetings of this association have been held within the last two months, at the first two of which the members of the Association were the only speakers, when Mr. Boland—who lately changed his residence from the township of Hope to this neighbourhood—was the principal speaker on both occasions. In a very clear, forcible and argumentative manner he showed the evils of intemperance, physically, mentally and financially, and traced its increase from the time of the French revolution, a period which so much increased the military spirit of Great Britain, but which unfortunately at the same time also increased the desire for alcoholic beverages.

Having shown the evils, he did not allow the audience to remain long in doubt, but that a cure could be effected, which he said was total abstinance from all intoxicating liquors. As one who in the most humble manner wished to benefit society, as the head of a large family, as a patriot and as a Christian, he besought the audience, which he said had the appearance of being intelligent, to throw their united influence into the temperance movement, and pray earnestly to God to bless the cause which promised such happy results, especially to the rising generation.

The announcement that the Rev. Mr. Gilmour was to lecture on Wednesday evening, the 16th instant, subject: "The three crowns of the ocean," was sufficient, even at this busy season of the year to secure a full house.

At the appointed hour the venerable and Rev. gentleman entered the Hall apparently in excellent health and spirits, and shortly afterwards upon the call of the Chairman, commenced by saying that three fourths of the surface of the globe is covered with water, and the remaining fourth with land, and that a large portion of its surface appears to have been the burying ground of animals, as indubitable signs are very evident in the limestone rocks to show that such is indeed the case. Perhaps no country in the world abounds more in these rocks than the Colony in which we live, as a range of them commences in the vicinity of Quebec running to lake Champlain and from thence to Kingston, whence it proceeds along lakes Ontario and Erie and ends in Michigan,—thus affording ample scope for investigating the subject he had noticed in these his introductory remarks. He next adverted to the rise and fall of the great empires of antiquity, none of which were successful on the ocean and therefore were not entitled to wear its crown.

Tyre, whose name signifies Rock, was the first place which became great by commerce, and which was entitled to wear the crown of the ocean. The conquests of Joshua and his successors most likely confined the inhabitants to a narrow strip of land lying to the North-West of Palestine, on the Mediterranean, thus forcing them to a maritime life. During their voyages they planted Colonies wherever they traded, some of which rose to great eminence; they traded with all nations, and it appears that they visited Cornwall in England about five centuries before the Christian era.

As evidence of its greatness Mr. Gilmour adduced the fact of its having withstood the attack of Nebuchadnezzar, when in the zenith of his power for a period of thirteen years, during which time a new city was built upon an island contiguous to the promontory on which the first city stood, and to which the greater part of the wealth, as well as a portion of the walls of the old city were conveyed, so that when surrendered the conquest was worth little.

A few centuries afterwards, during the reign of Alexander the Great, it suffered a two years' siege when it was taken, but it appears to have been the only place that for any considerable time stopped the progress of the Monarch in his career of conquest. After having worn the crown of the ocean for about two thousand years it was again reduced to a bare rock from which it had originally sprung.

Mr. Gilmour next mentioned many peculiarities in connection with the countries which had worn the crown of ocean, and said they were noted for their smallness of extent, narrowness, irregularity of outline, and indentation of their coasts—being generally provided with natural barriers for their protection which all other means could not have secured.

He then took a brief survey of the state of Europe, particularly Italy, during the period after the breaking up of the Roman empire in the West, when Alaric the Goth, and Attila the Hun, ravaged the peninsula, when the Lombards, driven from their homes by the fury of the barbarians, sought safety in that portion of the Adriatic known as the gulf of Venegia, which was covered with numerous small flat islands, (now numbering about 100 and connected by 300 bridges) and went on to show the security which the place afforded in consequence of the extreme difficulty of access, either by sea or land, and for some considerable length of time after its occupancy showing no signs of being inhabited. The city has the appearance of rising out of the sea, with canals for streets, and gondolas for carriages. The streets are narrow, but one in the form of an oblong called the Piayya in addition to many splendid buildings contains the church of St. Mark, and the Palace of the Doges or chief Magistrates. The extent of its carrying trade was shown by the number of persons conveyed to Palestine during the crusades. At length Venice was publicly crowned sovereign of the ocean by one of the Popes and arrived at the zenith of her power during the fifteenth century, when she had engrossed nearly the whole commerce of the East.

About this time a native of Genoa began to assert that the earth was round and not flat as was then generally supposed, and imagined that a nearer route to India could be obtained by sailing Westward. He applied to several European courts for assistance but only to be disappointed till at length under the patronage of Ferdinand and Isabella, sovereigns of Castelle and Arragon, he was with much difficulty—in consequence of the lowness of their finances—supplied with three small worn-out ships, and their refractory crews which had been pressed into the service, to commence a voyage which was, under the circumstances, perhaps the most hazardous ever attempted. The discovery of the New World, as America was then called, stirred up such a feeling of daring enterprize that from that period down to the present—now nearly four hundred years—expedition after expedition has traversed every part of the land and ocean, without as yet having satisfied the desire of those engaged in the work. Meanwhile a route was discovered round the Cape of Good Hope to India, which had the effect of diverting the principal part of the trade of the East from Venice, and this in addition to the disastrous wars with the Genoese had the effect of greatly reducing her power. With the loss of commerce Venice lost that superiority so long enjoyed, but still she is one of the most commercial cities in Italy.

During the latter part of the last, and beginning of the present century a contest arose between Great Britain, France, and Holland, as to which should wear the crown of ocean, and so certain were the Dutch of having succeeded that one of their vessels actually sailed through the English Channel and up the Thames with a broom at her mast head to show that they were masters of the sea. But they said that although beaten the English themselves did not seem to know it, indeed this expression has more than once been used respecting John Bull.

About this time Sir George Canning sent a part of the fleet to Copenhagen to drive the Danish fleet into British waters while another part was sent to capture the Portuguese. He was shortly afterwards called upon by parliament to account for bringing disgrace upon the Empire by thus unwontedly attacking two neutral powers, and for 13 years he bore the odium of having done so without making any public explanation. The cause afterwards assigned was that the Prince Regent of Portugal under secrecy that Napoleon had made arrangements to seize the fleets named, press them into his service, and combined with his own, would prove an overmatch for Great Britain. In this we cannot but perceive a manifestation of Divine interposition.

In conclusion, Mr. Gilmour thought that the reply of our gracious sovereign Queen Victoria to the foreign potentate who wished to know, to what she attributed Englands greatness, was well worthy of notice, and of being remembered. "Call on me," said she, "on to-morrow and I will inform you."

Accordingly he did so, when she handed him a beautifully bound volume of the Holy scriptures, saying: "to a knowledge of this sacred book we ascribe all our greatness."

He hoped that Britain would long be blessed with such a Sovereign, and long wear the crown of the ocean.

The lecture occupied one hour and fifteen minutes in delivery, and was deeply fraught with interesting historical information.

TORONTO EVENING JOURNAL.

CIRCULATION 6,000!

AN EXCELLENT ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

IN August last the first number of the Toronto Evening Journal made its appearance, and it has been published regularly each week from that time to the present.

The Proprietor feels grateful for the liberal advertising patronage extended to the paper thus far. Arrangements are now being made to give additional interest to the paper, both for readers and Advertisers.

Wholesale and Retail Merchants frequently purchase copies of the Toronto Evening Journal for the publishing of their Circulars, and furnish the names of thousands of Farmers and others to whom the paper is delivered and mailed—in addition to the regular issues. For instance, the following order just received from one Wholesale Firm in this city will explain the manner in which extra editions of the paper are attended to:—

"Toronto May 17th, 1862

"We have this day largelined with Mr. A.H. St. Germain to circulate five thousand copies of the 'Toronto Evening Journal' to parties named by us containing our advertisement.

ROBERT WALKER & SONS."

In this way the paper enjoys a home circulation, and that, consequently, become a first class advertising medium. All those who have ordered for the 'Toronto Evening Journal' will receive our greatest insertion in the Toronto Weekly "Journal," a large fact these paper established in 1857, and at present circulated in almost every part of Canada West.

The terms for advertising are less than has ever been offered to the public before, viz: three cents per line for the first insertion, and one cent per line for each subsequent insertion. Business and Professional Cards (without changes) will be inserted at one dollar per line by the year, when they contain no lines or less.

☞ Newspaper, Book and Job Printing, plain, neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously done.

☞ Office:—First flat over the 'Golden Lion' on King Street East.

A. H. ST. GERMAIN.

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT. - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen on Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair. There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States beforementioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurances during the year, contained in 1189 Proposal £454,833 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 961 Policies were issued 309,630 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS or said Policies 11,176 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPAT ON POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees 22,999 1 6
TOTAL SUM Assured under 4,190 current LIFE POLICIES 1,253,96 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS 373,563 2 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE 96,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report Stated that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his entire approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £22,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 16s 7d., to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £217,821 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinized in detail by the Directors.

In consequence, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realised on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured; that the total additions to the sum assured, now vest, or are equal to 38 per cent on the sum assured: and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 15 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

Year ending 31st January.	Amounts proposed for Assurance.	Amount of New Policies issued.	No. of Policies	New Annual Premiums.	Total Revenue in each year.	Accumulated Funds.

Votes of thanks were passed to the Directors and Office-bearers of the Company at Head-Offices and Branches, and after a very hearty vote of thanks to the Chairman for his conduct in the Chair, the meeting was dissolved.

To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been erected the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. Poetry.

Thoughts on Returning to Canada after a Visit to Derry, Ireland.

WRITTEN FOR 12TH JULY, 1862.

We may wander long years in a far-distant land,
But again with deep longing we seek the dear strand,
Where the stern mountains rise and the wild torrent sweeps
'Mid whose rocks the bold cataract thundering leaps;

Where each field and valley lie smiling in green,
Which outrivals the glow of the emerald's sheen:
Where the sweet harp of Erin so oft has been strung
Where the warrior has fought and the Minstrel has sung.

Oh! then bright scene of beauty, more fair than a dream,
The fond patriot's pride and the poet's glad theme;
D we gaze once again on the thrice hallowed soil,
As we float o'er thy bosom, thou glorious Loch Foyle!

Oh! the mind wanders back to the years that are fled,
And we think of the great, and illustrious dead,
As we tread o'er their ashes in yon sacred ground,
Whose walls still the bulwark of truth have been found.

Aye, with pride may we hail them, the bulwark of truth,
While we read of that Band in the flower of their youth,
Who rose up 'gainst oppression, who strong for their God,
Their King and their country, with blood dyed the sod;

Whose prayers for that country but ceased with their breath,
And who braved even pestilence, famine and death!
Oh! sing not of conquerors, whom glory awaits—
Where are souls like those "Boys" who first closed Derry's gates!

Where are hearts like those hearts that were waiting in vain,
That died rather than yield ere the tardy aid came!
Not alone for themselves did they struggle and die;
Not alone for themselves were those prayers breathed on high.

An invincible armor for shelter was given
By Him who watched o'er that dread conflict from heaven;
For had it been lost in that fearful affray,
Where were the pure faith of our fathers to-day?

Then, dear brethren, shall we on this far-distant shore,
Though our country may gladden our sight never more,
Not embrace as a sacred, an undying trust,
What they cherished so fondly who moulder in dust?

Be it ours to our children unstained to bequeath
Such a name as the deeds of our fathers achieve,
To lose naught of the ardor such hearts that inspires,
Nor prove recreant sons of such glorious sires.

Sure that cause must be just that could weather such storms,
That could brave persecution—its deadliest forms.
Let that cause be but ours, let our brotherhood stand
As a rampart of truth in the midst of the land.

Be our watchword as ever the loyal and true,
Like him who ne'er faltered to dare and to do;
Be his memory our beacon, who shone like a star,
'Mid those heroes and martyrs who slumber afar.

Aye, well may we cherish and honor that name;
Still deathless through ages to come be thy fame,
King William, thy name sends a thrill through each heart,
And an impulse for good to each soul can impart!

Miscellaneous.

An Actor's last days.

Dr. Wynne contributes to the recent issue of Harper's Magazine an article on the poet Hallock, in which he makes a curious statement about the late celebrated actor, Burton.

A year or two previous to his decease he became suddenly and alarmingly ill while in Philadelphia. On consulting Dr. Pancoast, an eminent surgeon, he learned that he was subject to a disease of the heart, which must inevitably prove fatal. He however cherished some hope of ultimate recovery, which Dr. Wynne endeavoured to turn him from, on the ground that if a man labors under an incurable malady, it is better for him to know the worst, in order to make preparation for the final result.—He therefore advised Mr. Burton to abandon the stage, give up his theatrical management, and with his abundant means, endeavour to lead, for the short time he might be spared, a life of ease and one consonant with his approaching end. One would suppose that such counsel as this, so judicious in itself, and coming from a friend without any professional bias, would have been accepted and followed. But far otherwise was the result.

Mr. Burton's reply was: "I cannot abandon the stage, it furnishes me with an excitement which I cannot live without. I should be driven to think of myself, and should go crazy."

What a confession! Mr. Burton was a man far above the common order of actors and actresses, who usually excel, in one thing, and are children in everything else. He was a man of fine literary taste, a writer of considerable merit, the owner of a very large and choice library, and possessed of social qualities of a very attractive kind. He enjoyed great eminence in his profession, being, if we are correctly informed, in one branch of it, quite unrivalled. He had large means, and hosts of literary, artistic and other friends. Yet this man dared not think of himself! He could not be shut up with his own thoughts. He had no power to face for a moment that future which lay at such a short distance before him. Nothing but the footlights, and the crowds, and the glare, and the music scenes of the stage, could divert his saddened mind. The gay throng of pleasure-seekers saw only the comic actor, whose inimitable personation of certain characters convulsed them with laughter, while he, alas! was seeking, amid their merriment the only relief he could imagine from the Death's head and crossbones continually before his eye.

What a spectacle! This brilliant actor performing night after night, not for bread nor for fame, nor for love of his art, but simply as a refuge from himself, as an escape from insanity! Unable to live yet unfit to die, and therefore unwilling to confront the truth! The boards on which he played saw many a tragedy, but never one so intensely affecting as that going on in Burton's mind during the last year of his performances. The whole house brought down in uproarious applause, and every risible strained to the utmost, and yet the agent in exciting this unextinguishable merriment, himself the prey of thoughts as gloomy that they almost made him crazy!

Mr. Burton's most successful impersonation we have been told, was a character in modern comedy corresponding to Moliere's Tartuffe. Of course, the friends of the theatre tell us in this case, as Moliere did of old, that the representation of a shrivelling, sanctimonious hypocrite is no reproach to tell religion, for which they have a cordial respect. Be this as it may, the effect on the popular mind is to confound godly men with hypocrites, and to lead people to attribute all strictness of morals to mere sanctimoniousness, so that a "serious family" is only an odious circle of pretenders, whose religion is finding fault with other people. The result is, therefore, a serious injury to the cause of Christ. Now, had Mr. Burton, while vainly seeking relief in a mirthful caricature of the Christian's character, language and hopes, only turned to one of the Saviour's humble followers, he might have found a way to think of himself without going crazy. He might have learned how to face death without fear; how to live even on sufferance, without plunging into a constant whirl of excitement. But, alas! he himself seems to have made the mistake which he taught so many others to make. He confounded religion with hypocrisy, and turned away from all pious people as either deceivers or deceived. If the people of God wished for any No ness in the case, which we are sure they did not, the revelation of Dr. Wynne shows that it came. The high priest of Momus, surrounded by his laughing train, was more miserable than many a poor cripple, diseased and dependent, with no possibility of recovery, yet cheered by a Christian hope.—Christian Intelligencer.

A Mormon Story—Sad and true History.

(From the St. Joseph (Mo.) Journal,)

Two years ago, along the flowery banks of a little rivulet that ran laughingly through one of the valleys of old Wales, a maiden and her lover walked. Both were young, and one was beautiful, and both were sad. It was a fearful meeting. The lovers had met to exchange their vows anew and then to part—he to embark as a sailor upon a vessel bound for America; she to remain at home, patiently counting the long months that should elapse before they could meet again. These lovers were rude, ignorant and stupefatious peasants. They knew but little, but their love was so great. Fondly they pledged each other the eternal troth—lingeringly they held each other in a last embrace—slowly, and with bleeding hearts and swimming eyes, they parted.

Three months afterward a letter reached the home of the young girl from the captain of the ship in which her lover had sailed. He had been drowned, and in his chest were found some papers that enabled the captain to inform her of the fate that had befallen him who alone made earth happy to her.

Not long after this there came to that country the Apostle of a new Faith. He was a man of strange and fervid eloquence. He drew a picture of a new home in a new world. He peopled that home with saints—he filled it with the glories and delights of Heaven brought to earth. He proclaimed himself the Moses, sent by God to lead his chosen children to the promised land.

The parents of the young girl of whom we have spoken took her to listen to this strange and enrapturing discourse. For many weeks a deep and profound stupor had settled upon her, and she lived like one in a dream. She listened to the wild enthusiasm of the Mormon propagandist with a stolid apathy, until he chanced to pronounce the word "America." That word, the name of the land for which her dead lover had sailed, acted on her like a spell.—She listened henceforth as one entranced and at the close of the discourse she sought out the preacher, and conversed with him.

What lies he told her—what cunning arts he used to draw her on—what spells he threw around her in the name of religion—will never be known. In a few days the missionary, hoary-headed and the husband of a harem of wives in the city of the Great Salt Lake, was reaked as the husband of this poor and beautiful young girl, and ere long, with his colony of converts and his young wife, embarked for the land of the New Jerusalem.

Last Saturday they reached this city. In the peaceful twilight of the day the poor, deluded Mormon wife separating herself from her companions walked down to the river's brink. She stood upon its bank, and watched its angry and turbid waters flow, hurrying on toward the sea. She heard a footstep behind her—she turned her head, and beheld her lover, to whose grave she had believed to be in the ocean, and to be reunited to whom in the spirit-land she had old herself on earth.

A wild shriek pierced through the evening air. She threw her arms toward Heaven, gazing up toward the eternal sky, and turning, leaped madly into the rapid stream. Without a word he followed her—for a moment they were both lost to sight—they were again clasped in each other's arms—and they sank to rise no more.

A crowd of agitated and weeping women soon gathered on the bank, from whom our informant gathered the incidents of this strange story. One of them who had known this ill-starred couple in Wales, had met the lover a few moments before. The story of his death was false. He had been picked up by a whaling vessel, carried to the coast of Oregon, and from thence he was making his way eastward. She had told him that his betrothed was on the river bank—he hastened to meet her—and died with her.

American Hotel Life

I cannot say that I like the hotels in these parts, or indeed the mode of life at American hotels in general. In order that I may not unjustly defame them, I will commence these observations by declaring that they are cheap to those who choose to practise the economy which they encourage, that the viands are profuse in quantity and wholesome in quality, that the attendance is quick and unsparing, and that travellers are never annoyed by that grasping greedy hunger and thirst after francs and shillings which mental inns. All this is, as must be admitted, great praise; and yet I do not like the American hotels. One is in a free country, and has come from a country in which one has been brought up to bug one's chains—so at least the English traveller is constantly assured—and yet in an American inn one can never do as one likes. A terrific gong sounds early in the morning, breaking one's sweet slumbers; and then a second gong sounding some thirty minutes later, makes you understand that you must proceed to breakfast, whether you be dressed or no. You certainly can go on with your toilet and obtain your meal after half an hours delay. Nobody actually scolds you for so doing, but the breakfast is, as they say in this country, "through." You sit down alone, and the attendant stands immediately over you. Probably there are two so standing. They fill your cup the instant it is empty. They tender you fresh food before that which has disappeared from your plate has been swallowed. They begrudge you no amount that you can eat or drink; but they begrudge you a single moment that you sit there neither eating nor drinking. This is your fate if you're too late, and therefore as a rule you are not late. In that case you form one of a long row of gazers who proceed through their work with a solid energy that is past all praise. It is wrong to say that Americans will not talk to me, at any rate till I got to the far West; but I have rarely found that they would address me first. Then the dinner comes early—at least it always does so in New England—and the ceremony is much of the same kind. You came there to eat, and the food is pressed on you almost ad nauseam. But, as far as one can see, there is no drinking. In these days, I am quite aware that drinking has become improper, even in England. We are apt at home to speak of wine as a thing tabooed, wondering how our fathers lived and swilled. I believe that, as a fact, we drink as much as they did; but nevertheless that is our theory. I confess, however, that I like wine. It is very wicked, but it seems to me that my dinner goes down better with a glass of sherry than without it. As a rule, I always did get it at hotels in America. But I had no comfort with it. Sherry they do not understand at all. Of course I am only speaking of hotels. Their claret they get exclusively from Mr Gladstone, and, looking at the quality, have a right to quarrel even with Mr. Gladstone's prices. But it is not the quality of the wine that I hereby intend to object to ignominy, so much as the want of any opportunity for drinking it. After dinner, if all that I hear be true, the gentlemen occasionly drop into hotel bars and "liquor up." Or rather this is not done especially after dinner, but without prejudice to the hour at any time that may be found desirable. I also have "liquored up," but I cannot say that I enjoy the process. I do not intend hereby to accuse Americans of drinking much, but I maintain that what they do drink, they in the most uncomfortable manner that the imagination can devise. In their huge hotels all the bell-ropes of each house ring on one bell only, but a patent indicator discloses a number, and the whereabouts of the ringer is shown. One fire heats every room, passage, hall, and cupboard—and does it so effectually that the inhabitants are all but stifled. Soda-water bottles open themselves without any trouble of wire and strings. Men and women go up and down stairs without motive power of their own. Hot and cold water are laid on to all the chambers; though it sometimes happens that the water from both taps is boiling, and that when once turned on it cannot be turned off again by any human energy. Everything is done by a new and wonderful patent contrivance.—North American. By Anthony Trollope.

Wife vs. Lady.

It is certainly not in good taste for a gentleman to speak of his wife as his lady, or to register their names upon the books of a hotel as 'John Smith and Lady,' or to ask a friend 'How is your lady?' This is all fashionable vulgarity, and invariably betrays a lack of cultivation. The term wife is far more beautiful and appropriate and refined, whether it may be said to the contrary.—Suppose a lady were to say, instead of my 'husband,' my gentleman, or suppose we were to speak of 'Mrs. Fitz Maurice and her gentleman.' The thing would be absolutely ludicrous, and its obverse is none the less so, if rightfully considered. A man's wife is his wife, and not his lady; and we marvel this latter term is not absolutely tabooed in such a connection, at least by intelligent and educated people. It ought to be left for the foolish aristocracy.—Providence Post.

WHAT IS DEATH!—Lately, in a Deaf and Dumb Institution, while the pupils were being examined, the question was put, "What is Death?" After several suitable replies had been given, one of the deaf mutes took his slate and wrote as under:—"On the 18th December, 1861, Principal Cunningham died saying, I am quietly going home. Thought Essential to Health.

If we would have our bodys healthy, our brains must be used, and used in orderly and vigorous ways. But the life-giving streams of force may flow down from them into the expectant organs, which can master but as they are ministered unto. We admire the vigorous animal life of the Greeks, and with justice we recognise and partly seek to imitate the vigorous gymnastic and other means which they employed to secure it. But, probably, we should make a fatal error if we omitted from our calculation the hearty and generous earnestness with which the highest subjects of art, speculation and politics, were pursued by them. Surely in their case the beautiful and energetic mental life was expressed in the athletic and graceful frame. And were it a mere extravagance to ask whether some part of the lassitude and weariness of life, of which we hear so much in our day, might be due to lack of mental occupation on worthy subjects, exacting and repaying a generous enthusiasm, as well as to an over-exercise on lower ones?—whether an engrossment on matters which have not substance enough to justify and satisfy the mental grasp, be not at the root of some part of the maladies which affect our mental convalescence? Any one who tries it soon finds out how wearying, how disproportionately exhausting is an overdose of "light literature" compared with an equal amount of time spent on real work. O this we may be sure, that the due exercise of the brain—of thought—is one of the essential elements of human life. The perfect health of a man is not the same as that of an ox or a horse. The preponderating capacity of his nervous part demands a corresponding life.—Cornhill Magazine.

—The Quebec Chronicle of Thursday gives the following account of a terrible tragedy that occurred in the township of Stanstead, Arthabaska:—"A woman named Madame Bourrett, who had manifested insanity years ago, and before her marriage, and whose husband is now in the United States, at the bay atop there, murdered her seven children, and then cut her own throat. It appears that on Sunday night there was a veillee at her house, and the thing must have occurred between the departure of the guests and the morning, for at an early hour yesterday morning, Madame Bourrett's daughter, who had been at the veillee, but resided at St. Norbert, called at her mother's to see her. Finding the door closed, she looked through the window, and was then shocked to see eight corpses—those of her mother, her brother and sisters. The eldest of the murdered children, a girl fourteen years of age seems to have had a desperate struggle for life, for the bodies of mother and daughter were lying close together, and the mother had several wounds on the arm apparently inflicted by an axe that was also close by the bodies. The daughter's throat and arm were cut, evidently by a razor, which the right fingers of the mother still tightly grasped when the tragedy was discovered by the surviving daughter. All the doors and windows were found barred in the inside, that of course leading to the cause which first the dreadful deed had been committed by some one in the

A Fair Retort.

At the assize at Naas, many years back, while Mr. Parsons was addressing the Court, an ass in the street happened to bray so loudly as to interrupt the learned gentleman; whereupon the learned Judge, Lord Norbury, said:—

"One at a time, gentlemen—one at a time, if you please."

This sally caused much merriment to the Court, but did not in the least discompose Mr. Parsons, who pursued the tenor of discourse as if nothing of the kind had happened. He was not, however, insensible to the merit of a joke, nor unwilling to let it go unrewarded, and an opportunity was soon offered him of giving a "Roland for an Oliver."

When his lordship was charging the jury, the same ass—which seemed fond of the Court—brayed again, "deeper and deeper still."

But at this moment the learned Judge was so entirely taken up with the business in progress, that he quite forgot his own joke, and startled at the sound of Ned Ly's sweet voice, he hastily said:

"What's that—what noise is that?"

"It is only the echo of this Court, my lord," said Mr. Parsons, gravely.

The justice and excellence of this retort was acknowledged by the loud and continued peals of laughter with which the court resounded, and in which the Judge himself could not refrain from joining.

Ethan Spike on the Merrimac.

Hornby, July 4th, 1862.

Wot is it about this ere butting consarn—the Merrimack? Some say she is no longer non est—she's bust her biler an' kerlapsed her engine, and she's gone daown to the subterranean depthe of the beerin billows—which is tempestoon round about. Others, that she's with Generil Freemaunt at Merrimmons or Pike's Peak; but up here we most generally think she's run the blocklied—through the gut o' Kansas—an is now on a rampage daown East.

Known in the importance of Hornby to the Union, its people naterally feel anxious that it should be properly defended; not that they keered a cuss about thairselves, but ollers actoonted by that subline patriotism which is folkerlated to do the greatest good to them as practises it. An knowin the enemy would strike at Hornby first, I was sent to Orgusty as a committee of this hull on coastwise defences, or offences if we needed em.

I faound the Guverner to hum—and a mighty perlite, pert body he is, too.

"How-dee you dew?" says the Guverner, says he. "Mr. Spike," says he, "I'se heerin tell of you, but never before did my mortial wisuals rest on your imprevm countinents. It's good for sour eyes pollyfemus in the nose and gitter in the head to look at yer," says he.

I told him that I'd ollers been accaounted good for them deceases, likewise pritty sertain in the mumps, and deth on fitz ar rebellious fevers. An then says I, 'Guverner—know dew you dew?

'Pretty well, I thank you,' says he, 'exceptin a bad cold which has settled on the borax, but ef the brown creeter convalescence don't set in, I don't keer. Otherways, I'm no's to be crawlin.'

Then we didn't boath of us say nothin for some time. The Guverner picked his teeth, and I go aout my kafe an I undertuk to wittle the cheer, but the fust lick I broke the blade agin a nail.

I fairly squalled, I war so mad.

"Blast yer old rotted nails to eternal blastination," says I.

The Guverner laughed.

"I have to put nails in all the tables and cheers," says he "elsewise I should hev to get a new set every month. Two sets, at least, would be wittled up every time the general court sot."

I was riled as well I ought—'twas a ripper, that blade—arter honin it on a brick I could split a hair crossways, without bearin on much. For a minit I looked starin, but when I reflected that I could charge it to the town in my bill of expenses I mollyfied—I southaughed the Guverner.

"No consequence," says I, "the old knife want wurth a speckled cuss—Ise glad yeou bed nails in the cheer," says I.

An we shook hands agin.

Arter another long paws of interregnums the Guverner looked at me kinder sly, an says he, "Mr. Spike you wanted to see me for sumthin?"

"How do you know that?" says I.

"Come, come," says he, slappin me on the shoulder an laughin; "Ise heern o' you, you cuss, a perfect daown East Metternick and Tallyrand," says he, "aout with it, old boy."

"Wal," says I, "air you aweer of the importance of Hornby to the perovation of the palaydiums of the Union."

"Mr. Spike, I are."

"Wal, then, here's a nutshell—Portland, South Barwick, Junction, Kennebunk Baldwin and Blackstrope, her all bin fortyfied. We air modest, we don't expect to go as high as forty, or even thirty, but we do think we orter be fied some, ef taint more'n fifteen. Give us a few bombastic flotillers, a dozen or tew each Combombards, Daniel Green Parrots Winfield rifles, a lot of procrastination raps, a basket full of comical shells with steel pints, a few revolvin turrens to fit into canawl boats, several or more of you have em to spare, iron clad monsters, ten barrils Medford rum, and ditto flour, about 4,000,000——,

'There, there, hold on, Mr. Spike' interrupted the Guverner. 'You her named armaments enough for the rock o' Jibberaltar. What on airth do you want it for?"

'Well Washhun,' says I, 'the Merrimack's abroad,' says I.

'Pooh,' says he, 'that critter was blown up three months ago.'

'Well, it hain't so, it's a Federal he, that briny behemouth of the deep is now on sour coast.'

'Wal, sposin she is, know is she goin to get to Hornby?'

'By the canawls,' says I.

'But know kin she git through the locks?'

'Lord,' says I, 'she'll pick 'em."

'God b'ess my soul!' says he, 'I never thought of that. I'll call a caoncil meetin to-night.'

REPARTEE.—Lord Broadlands, who was a fast man, asked Mr. Justice Mellow, of convivial memory, if there was any truth in that old saying, "As sober as a judge?" It was a good hit, and every one laughed heartily at it. "It is perfectly true," replied the judge, "as old sayings are. They are characteristic, at least, for sobriety is the attribute of a judge, as inebriety is of a nobleman. Then we say, 'so sober as a judge;' 'As drunk as a lord;'" Mellow was the readiest man I ever knew, he went on to say—"I know there are men too fond of the bar to sit on the bench, and that there are peers who richly deserve a dock. The first are worthy of imitation; the last seldom get what is their due."

Peterborough Examiner.
THURSDAY, 7TH AUGUST, 1862.

TO OUR PATRONS.

It is now three months since the Examiner commenced with its present proprietor, and he has cause of congratulation that the steps he took at the onset have tended to make the paper popular with the public as well as advantageous to himself. In the present time when keen competition amongst journals has caused a reduction in the subscription price of papers, the proprietor was determined not to be behind in this respect in a bid for public favor. The terms which he announced were One Dollar per annum, in advance. If not paid before the expiry of three months 25 cents will be added. He is glad to announce that a very large number of subscribers have paid in advance, and the subscription list has increased steadily, and the advertising patronage has largely increased also—leaving no room for complaint, but on the contrary affording cause for gratitude for the share of public patronage accorded to the Examiner.

The proprietor flatters himself that by steadily following the course which he marked out when he assumed the paper, a discerning public will still continue to patronize him. His aim will always be, as far as in his power, to make the Examiner a good newspaper, acceptable to the family, to the business community, and to the public generally. Aware that the newspaper press influences a large portion of the community, his endeavour will be to convey weekly through the Examiner as much practical and useful reading as possible.

His opinion of what a newspaper should be is tersely and ably expressed by a contemporary which he will take the liberty to append, merely adding that he fully endorses the views of the writer:

"The importance of a well-conducted Newspaper Press cannot be over-estimated as, whether the public acknowledge it or not, the Daily and Weekly Journals are the only part of the literature of the country studied regularly, and with a living interest, by the great mass of the population. Nor is this surprising when it is remembered that the Newspaper contains information on all questions of human interest, and records with great promptitude and fulness not only the opinions of men in regard to the duties of life, but also their every-day actions, whether of co-operation or antagonism, in the ordinary business of the world.

The Newspaper is the history of the hour and day in which we live—the medium by which the joys and sorrows of our fellow-men—their crimes and glories—their successes and failures—their plottings and scemings—their speculations and adventures—their inventions and discoveries—their wants and wishes—their marriages and divorces—their births and deaths are made known to the world. Through the columns of the Newspaper Press we become acquainted with the practical conclusions of statesmen and philosophers, and by its instrumentality our sympathies are aroused and our assistance called forth when oppression is to be resisted, wrong redressed, danger overcome, or distress relieved.

The influence of the Daily and weekly Newspaper press is not only a powerful but a growing influence, and if it is not in all cases as salutary as it might be, this ought only to convince us that something remains yet to be done by the general public to encourage and requite those who seek to elevate and purify its tone, and to stimulate and foster high moral aims on the part of those upon whom the duties of journalism devolve.

The historical part of a paper, namely, the "news," should be full and impartial. In recording events justice should be done to all sects and parties, and no false gloss given, or exaggeration resorted to, with the view of serving party or personal interest. What the Newspaper reader is entitled to, and what he should have furnished to him, is a faithful record of the business and life of the day, and any journal that is not full and impartial in this respect lacks one of the great requisits of a good paper.

The disquisitional portion of a paper should be manly and intelligent. When in the columns of a journal all available information has been, as it were, gathered and hived, such comment or discussion as it may be deemed necessary to address to the reader by way of caution, encouragement, or remonstrance, should be argumentative and fair, and free from the asperity and narrowness of party; practical and farseeing, not trival and limited; without class partizanship, and altogether above the suspicion of seeking to promote class interests for, whilst the honourable claims of party should be admitted, the demands of justice and fair dealing should never be forgotten or overlooked."

UNION SCHOOL.—We beg to call attention to the advertisement of the Union School in another column. The school is now in a most efficient state, and our young people have now before them the best opportunity of getting instructions in all the branches of a liberal, classical, and an accomplished English Education. We hope there will be a large attendance at the opening of the school; it is very important that it should be by the case.

THE CONFERENCE ADDRESS.

Most of our readers are aware that the Wesleyan Methodist Conference at its late sittings adopted an address to the Governor General, intended as a sort of welcome on his assumption of the important duty of ruling over this dependency of the British Empire. All this is right enough and no one would have said a word to any body of men presenting an address of the sort to the Governor, or any one else. But the occasion of a congratulatory address is used to impress upon the Governor's mind a subject which has taken deep hold of the Conference, and for the attainment of which many of its members have maintained a zeal and assiduity worthy of a better cause,—we refer to the repeated and persistent efforts put forth by the Methodist Clergy to establish in Canada a Governmental system of Denominational Colleges, or perhaps more properly, public support by public moneys for the Colleges of the denominations already existing, as well as of those yet to be established. The subject is subtly introduced somewhat as experienced Jesuits would do it, but it escapes not the eye of Lord Monck who very properly snubbed these clerical sharpers and answered them according to their folly.

That portion of their address wherein they wish to convey to the Governor that Victoria College should share in the "grants of the Legislature," is very offensive indeed to a very large portion of the community who seek to preserve the integrity of the Toronto University—the people's college. Indeed it is a positive insult, and it is on this account that we notice the action of the Conference at all. No better rebuke could have been given them than the one administered by the Governor in his reply to their memorial. The following is the portion we object to:

"While therefore, we admit the Wisdom and justice, upon the ground of equal rights to all classes, that liberal provision should be made by the Legislature for that class of the community who desire to have their sons without parental or pastoral oversight, during their course of collegiate education, we think that provision equally liberal should be made for the larger class or classes of the community who erect their own colleges, in order that their sons may be under religious oversight while they peruse the national curriculum of collegiate education, and are subjected to a standard of examination. It is under the influence of such convictions of duty, that we should establish a college, which has already sent forth many hundreds of educated youths, and which, with similar colleges, we believe is entitled to liberal and permanent endowment by the Legislature."

Here the insinuation is thrown out that the large class who do not fall in with the conference opinion of denominational colleges, and who seek to preserve the National College as it was at first established for the use of the people—the whole people, irrespective of their creeds or principles,—are consequently regardless of the religious education of their sons, that "they desire to have them without parental or pastoral care during their collegiate course." This offensive paragraph has as it deserves been pretty severely commented upon by a large portion of the press. It appears strange to us that a body of men professing to love their neighbours as themselves should so far forget themselves as to send to the first man in the country and then to the Province at large their own recorded sentiment that they do not love those who seek to prevent them from destroying a great and noble institution,—should in such a sly way stab their neighbours in the dark.

But look again at their statements and compare these with the facts. "Whilst we admit," they say, "the wisdom and justice, upon the ground of equal rights to all classes, that liberal provision should be made by the legislature for that class of the community who desire to have their sons without parental or pastoral oversight during their course to collegiate education," &c. This singular passage conveys the idea that the Legislature has actually made the "provision" here so insultingly referred to, whereas the Legislature did nothing of the kind. It established about 1793 a fund for Grammar Schools all over the country, and a College for the higher branches of education, in the town of York, U. C., which fund and college were not intended for one class, but for the whole people of Upper Canada, and it is a positive falsehood to say or insinuate that the Legislature in making the provision it did, made it for those only who "prefer their sons being without parental or pastoral oversight." It is well known that in 1828 this College so established and endowed was seized on by the Episcopalians and employed to further their denominational interests. That in 1849 it was wrenched from them, the Methodists then assisting; that the Methodists f anded their College about 1834, obtained the charter for it in 1841—some eight years before the liberation of the national College from the parties who most unjustly and wickedly held it; that Victoria College was built when there were no hopes of the people ever getting hold of their own College again, and when to obtain a collegiate education it was indispensible for any one but an Episcopalian to go to Britain, the States or elsewhere. Victoria College was then erected to supply the want of a College, and not as the Conference address would lead one to suppose, to supply a deficiency overlooked by the Legislature. At the time of its erection there was "pastoral oversight" in King's College, but it was such pastoral oversight as they did not choose to place their sons under, and so they erect "Cobourg College," as a denominational College. It is true its doors were not barred as were those of King's College; no test nor subscription was required to enter it, but it has always, been and is at this moment, under the management and exclusive control of the Methodist denomination. As such it deserves support and encouragement from that body, but as to its being "entitled to liberal and permanent endowment by the Legislature," we hope the Governor, the Government, the Legislature and the majority of the people in Canada,

But this is not all. Before the disaster was known to the country, reenforcements commenced pouring up James river. The troops were all hardened and fresh from glorious battle fields. Army after army were poured upon the peninsula, and the people waited with breathless expectation, daily anticipating the roar of McClellan's artillery again in front of Richmond. A week passed away—no battle, no advance. Two weeks—the same. The third week is now nearly gone, and what do we hear from the peninsula. Not yet ready—more reenforcements wanted! And this is precious time wasted, and the army in idleness wasted away beneath the burning rays of a summer's sun. While the Rebels are pressing forward in every direction, an army that certainly numbers over 150,000 men, is lying on the banks of James river, doing nothing.

Yet how many are there, people and journals, who, if McClellan should be superseded, would condemn the act as a burning shame, and a great military outrage? Let them look into their hearts, and they will discover that they love Cæsar more and Rome less—they are worshipping an idol that sits not on the alter of their country. Until ineffective Generals, no matter who they are, are laid aside, when incompetency becomes apparent, we cannot look for a vigorous prosecution of the war. The peculiar heart, honest and sincere enough, has as yet a pulsation that does not beat to the music of the Union.

MORE ABOUT the FOOTE CHARGES.

The Review thinks, papers which publish the doings of the former Ministry in jobbing, should also publish the doings of the present one. We, this week, comply with the wish of our contemporary, and give, as comes to our hand, something about the old and new, and our vouchers therefor:

MORE MUCILAGE.—Unless we are greatly mistaken, there are other revelations in store for those whom recent developments have made curious on the interesting subject of printing and stationery. Discoveries are not confined alone to the Crown Land Department and the Bureau of Agriculture. The Post Office Department and the Finance Department have each their stories to tell—stories which, judging from the opening chapter, will be replete with more of those startling, stranger than fiction facts, than the blue books have yet published to the wonderment of the Canadian public. Mr. Postmaster General Smith, of blessed memory, paid marvelous prices for articles comprised under the general head of Mucilage, and took astonishing quantities of them. We shall probably be told in due time how many thousand dollars of the people's money he paid away more than he ought to have done for red tape and pens and ink. But, incredible as it may appear, Mr. Finance Minister Galt improved upon Mr Smith's example. Mr. Smith and Mr. Vankoughnet paid big prices, it is true, but the Department received some equivalent for the money in the shape of goods. For heavy advances, however, made by Mr. Galt—advances, we are told, amounting to from $8,000 to $10,000—the contract is to this day unfulfilled! Ministers are fairly at work in their department, and if these are the first fruits of their investigations, what may we not expect before they get through?—Dumfries Reformer.

The New Commissioner of Crown Lands.

We see that the Markham Economist is claiming credit for the new Commissioner of Crown Lands, the Hon. Mr. McDougall, that, though he has been in office but a few weeks, he has effected the following reforms:

1st. He has put his foot down on the disgraceful Foote jobs, by which the country was being robbed at the rate of some thirty thousand dollars a year.

2nd. He has put a stop to the useless surveys of rocky regions, that cannot be settled for the next fifty years, but which were being carried on for the benefit and employment of the friends of the Cartier-Macdonald Government—costing the country thousands of dollars.

3rd. Mr. McDougall has put a stop to the sale of whole townships of land en bloc to speculators to be held as an incubus to the settlement and prosperity of the country.

4th. He has just brought into the market the wild lands north of the Georgian Bay, and offers them to actual settlers at twenty cents an acre.

So far—well. For these reforms, Mr. McDougall deserves credit. They are well worthy of his reputation as a man of practical ability and of sound judgment. He has got under his management a department which for some years has been sadly mismanaged, so that there is ample room for reform. The instalments mentioned in the above extract are first-rate, but they are by no means all. According to a return printed last session, the expenses and the number of employees in that department have been quite doubled within a few years. Suppose the new Commissioner tries the experiment of dismissing a few of the useless clerks, &c., and of cutting down some of the extravagant salaries. The country would sustain such an experiment most enthusiastically. Try it Mr. McDougall.—Port Hope Guide.

ORGANSHIP AT QUEBEC.—"We have a letter from Mr. C. E. Romaine denying in toto the statement that he has purchased the Quebec Chronicle.

"We have also a telegram from Quebec which says that the Mercury has been selected as organ by the Government, and that Mr. George Sheppard is to turn the handle. Mr Foote has been thrown overboard, and the Chronicle is for sale."—Globe of Tuesday.

We could adduce more, but we think the above will do for one week.

WE publish below a letter on the use of Tobacco, and recommend the careful perusal of it by those using the baneful weed. Though written some 17 years ago, it may stimulate some halting soul to do as did the writer—abandon the use of tobacco now and forever:

"QUINCY, Mass., Aug. 10, 1845.

"DEAR SIR,—I have received your letter of the 13th instant, and shall deem myself highly honored by the inscription to me of your introduction to the proposed publication of the Rev. J. B. Lane's work on Tobacco and its mysteries, smoking and chewing. I was warned by a medical friend of the pernicious operation of this habit upon the stomach and the nerves; and the advice of the physician was fortified by the result of my own experience. More than thirty years have passed away since I deliberately commenced the use of tobacco in all its forms; and although the resolution was not carried into execution without a struggle of vitiated nature, I never yielded to its impulses, and in the space of three or four months of self denial, they lost their stimulating power, and I have never since felt it as a privation.

I have often wished that every individual of the human race afflicted with this artificial passion, could prevail upon himself to try but for three months the experiment which I have made! and that it would turn every acre of tobacco land into a wheat field, and add five years of longevity to the average of human life.

I am, with great respect, dear Sir, your friend and Christian Brother,

We understand the arrangement between the town and the Railway lessees is concluded, and that the latter have paid the first instalment of the sum agreed upon. This will relieve the Town of a part of the taxes which otherwise would have to be levied. The rate for the present year it is supposed will be about 3s in the £.

THE WAR NEWS amounts to very little for a week past. The most noticeable item is that which relates to the difficulty of obtaining volunteers, and the preparation to enforce the unpopular movement of drafting. There has been a general impression for some time back, that a severe battle was about being fought at or near Richmond. Many now seem to think that very little more fighting will be done till the weather becomes cooler. From private advices received to-day from Newport News, this latter expectation prevails in the army. The weather there is described as being "hot enough to cook victuals." Active preparations are in progress on both sides, and each party is sanguine of success.

WE have received through the Post Office a letter from "A Sufferer," calling the attention of the authorities to the fact of a band of lawless men and women that have a rendezvous about half-a-mile South of the Railway Station, in the shape of a "Brooks Bush Gang." The writer complains of the depredations in the Town by this lawless set, in breaking windows, stealing, cursing and swearing, &c. We should have inserted the communication had the writer left his name at our office. We know the nuisance complained of exists and it should be abated.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

LETTER No. 7.

LONDON (CONTINUED.)

The tower of London is supposed to have been erected about 1078, by William the Conqueror, since which time considerable additions have been made by his successors. The Tower was not always used as a dungeon: until the era of Queen Elizabeth it was a Royal Palace, in which the sovereigns had the custom to spend the first week after their accession. It is now many years since it has been used as a state prison. The last state prisoners being Thistlewood and his associates in the Cato Street Conspiracy, who were committed in 1820, five of whom were executed in the same year. Besides the entrance already named there are three more, which are opened at five in the morning in summer, and at daylight in the winter, with as much formality as if London were in a state of siege.—There is a private entrance, commonly called Traitors' Gate, because it was customary to convey state prisoners through it. The White Tower, the largest and most ancient part of this fortress, is not, however, the most interesting. It is a bulky edifice of a quadrangular form, measuring about 116 feet in length by 96 feet in width, and 91 feet in height. The building consists of three lofty stories. On the first floor there are two large rooms, one is used as a deposit for navy stores, and the other as a fencing-room; there is also another room, which most probably was used for a prison. The second floor has also two rooms filled with military stores, and an apartment called Cæsar's Chapel or the Norman Chapel.—When the Kings of England held their court in the Tower, this chapel was used for their devotions and the members of the Royal family. In it are placed the records relating to the use and privileges of the place, and the models of the new war machines. In the upper story is to be seen a very ancient ceeding of carved wood. It is said that the principal room was used for the council chamber. At the foot of the White Tower, on its south side, is a very simple and low building, called the Horse Armoury, which is filled with a long line of British monarchs on their war-steeds, and cased in complete armour. There are to be seen also three swords, a helmet and girdle, which belonged to Tippo Saib; and several helmets and armour taken at the battle of Waterloo; and some military dresses taken from the Chinese, in 1860. Near the entrance is to be seen a model of the machine of Sir Thomas Loombe, to organzine. It is composed of 26,586 wheels and 97,746 springs, which weave 93,726 yards of silk thread each turning of the wheel. This wheel makes three revolutions a minute. On the right of this armoury is a room containing specimens of the different kinds of fire-arms in use at various times since the invention of gunnery. From this room the visitor enters into Queen Elizabeth's Armoury, by a stair-case from the north-east corner of the Horse Armoury. It contains a variety of arms, axes, lances, spears, pikes, &c. At one end of the room is a figure of Queen Elizabeth clad in an armour which the antiquarians proved to have belonged to her father. The figure is seated on a cream coloured horse held by a page. In this room is also to be seen the axe with which the heads of Anne Boleyn and the Earl of Essex, victims of the ferocious caprices of Henry VIII, were cut off; the one with which the days of Catherine Howard were put to an end; a wooden cannon used by Henry VIII at the siege of Boulogne; two pieces of cannon presented to Charles II., when a child; the invincible banner taken from the Spanish Armada; the great stick of Henry III., with which he used to walk through the streets of London to see if the constables were doing their duties; besides these things there are a great number of other curiosities. Close to the above is the Jewel Office, known also by the name of the Martin Tower, where are preserved the jewels and all the coronation regalia. The value of all the emblems of royalty kept in what is called the Jewel Office is upwards of £6,000,000. The crown worn by Her Majesty Queen Victoria cost £1,000,000. Several crowns and sceptres are here, the circlet of gold which the king holds in his right hand at his coronation, the blunt sword of mercy and the two sharper ones of justice, ecclesiastical and temporal, the large golden salt-cellar, in the shape of the White Tower, the articles used at every coronation, a large silver font used only at royal baptisms, the ampulla or golden eagle-shaped receptacle for the oil with which the kings are anointed, and many other precious things. Perhaps the most interesting spot in the ancient fortress is the Tower Chapel erected in the reign of Edward I. Who is there that has ever entered that narrow portal, through which so many of the headless dead have been carried in their bloody shrouds to their last home, without feelings of the deepest emotion? What turbulent passions, what fair forms, rest calmly beneath our feet! Here for a time rested the headless trunk of Sir Thomas Moore. In front of the altar sleep the two ill-fated wives of the tyrant Henry VIII, Anne Boleyn and Catherine Howard; between them, in the same grave with his turbulent and ambitious brother, Lord Seymour of Sudley, and side by side with his powerful rival, Lord Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, sleeps the Protector Somerset, Lord Rocheford, brother of Queen Anne Boleyn; the countess of Salisbury, the last offspring of the Plantagenets; the Bishop of Rochester, John Fisher; and here lies also the wise and powerful minister Cromwell, and many others of the great dead. The following buildings are also to be noticed: the Bell Tower, in which it is said Queen Elizabeth was shut up; the Beauchamp or Cobham Tower, which consists in two floors, bears on the walls the deplorable testimony of the misery endured by those who were shut up in it. The tower, being a state prison, is under the government of a Constable, who has under him a lieutenant, a deputy lieutenant, a tower major, and other officers.

The Thames Tunnel.—This extraordinary undertaking was projected and executed by Sir I. K. Brunel. This passage, intended to establish a communication between Wapping and Rotherhithe, two of the most populous and commercial districts in London, was commenced in 1825 and open in 1843. The Tunnel is considered one of the most astounding and marvellous constructions of modern times. It consists of two arches built of brick; carriages and foot passengers will pass through it; the passages are well lighted with gas, placed in each of the arches. Its dimensions are as follows: length, 1,200 feet; width, 35 feet; height, 22 feet; width of each arch, 16 feet; thickness between the vault of the Tunnel and the Thames, above 15 feet.

St. Paul's Cathedral.—The front of this building, which looks westward, facing Ludgate Hill, is adorned with a portico, consisting of twelve columns of the Corinthian order, to which the visitor ascends by twenty-two black marble steps. Above this portico is another, consisting of eight columns of the Composite order, supporting a triangular pediment. The entablature represents the conversion of St. Paul. On the apex of the pediment is a colossal figure of St. Paul, with two of equal size at each end, representing St. Peter and St. James; and along the summit of this front are the statues of the four Evangelists. The dome which ascends nobly above the church, upon a base 21 feet high, is surrounded with thirty-two Corinthian pillars. The interior of the church, which is magnificent since it has been gilt, contains many monuments and statues dedicated to the memory of distinguished men. Opposite the entrance on the north side, is the new organ, erected at a cost of £3,000. After we have seen the interior we ascend to the top to examine the vast dome, the galleries, the cupola, and the lantern, which afford an extensive and remarkable view of London and its environs. The ascent is made by a rather wide circular staircase, to reach a gallery which surrounds the lower part of the dome, called the whispering gallery, because the slightest whisper near the wall is distinctly heard on the opposite side of the vast circle. The pavement of the church from that height produces a beautiful effect.—From the whispering gallery, visitors ascend to another gallery which surrounds the dome, and is supported by the colonnade of which we have spoken. The ascent to the ball is by a staircase of 616 steps, of which 280 lead to the whispering gallery. The following are the principal dimensions of the cathedral: length from east to west within the walls, 510 feet; breadth from north to south in the transversal part, 282 feet; height from the centre of the floor to the crown, 340 feet; height from the crypt or vaults to the crown, 404 feet; breadth from the choir to the nave, 100 feet; height to the top of the pediment under the figure of St. Paul, 120 feet; height of the towers, 287 feet; circumference of the church, 2,385 feet. Descending from the body of the cathedral, the visitor is conducted to the crypt, used as the place of sepulture for great men who are interred in the church. The chief objects of interest in these subterranean vaults are the tombs of the Duke of Wellington and Viscount Nelson.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—In following up the train of thought of that expressed in my last we will look for a few moments on the responsibility every Orangeman is held under, not only in himself but that of his fellow man. From the very fact that the "Loyal Orange "Institution is formed of persons desirous "of supporting to the utmost of their power "the principles and practice of the Christian Religion, to maintain the laws and "constitution of the country, afford assist-"ance to the distressed members of the "order, and otherwise to promote such "laudable and benevolent purposes as may "tend to the due ordering of Religion and "Christian charity, and supremacy of law, "order, and constitutional freedom."

This and this alone can keep the order as it should be, for while a brother may be well meaning and his desires strong towards the order, do his utmost and it only fails unless he has the wherewithal to test his desires. Good conduct is the mainstrug of its success, but in nine cases out of ten it is only seen in those who know themselves best by information, and proper demeanour is only gained through the medium of intelligence. We are held under great responsibility, and in particular by the outside protestant community, for we do believe that we are looked upon as a people and a body to which the following passages of Sacred Writ has a direct and concise reference to: "Thou shalt teach men ordinances and laws, and shalt show them the way wherein they must walk, and the work they must do. Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness, and place them to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, and rulers of tens."—Ex. 18, 20 21.

Now we are of a stronger opinion still that Orangemen should be "in toto" versed with a thorough knowledge of themselves and their duty to the order. As was mentioned in my last there are many with us who are giants in knowledge, but this has a direct reference to us who do not pretend to know so much of the matter, but who are willing to see and to be taught, and dig in the mines of knowledge for ourselves, and urge upon the County of Peterborough to be the first in the great work of bettering our condition, and to take action on the matter for the sake of some of the younger and less experienced in the world. Being aware that none are too wise to learn, and would be very willing to add to the coffers of their lodge for the purpose of gaining that which is essential to take us through this life of ours, and that which would bring a hundred fold of benefit in return.

'Tis true, indeed, there are those who are quite easy concerning themselves and contented with what they now enjoy, and with folded arms sink in despondency and heed not their weaker brethern, but it is very encouraging indeed to perceive the desire for the improvement of the age, and ready to cooperate in the matter of reformation.

Providence is with us because we are right and working for Him who hath protected us from many conspiracies and frustrated diabolical plots and snares laid for us. Since first the golden orb of day rose from behind the eastern horizon and gazed upon the institution, Heaven borne as it is, as she emerged forth from the breast of patriotism, when the nations of the world were wrapt in superstition, wretchedness and Idolatry. Doubtless nature did rejoice and was glad when the "Glorious and Immortal William" spoke first of liberty, and as he marshalled forth his brave followers on to the vast plains of "Popery and tyrany," to betake himself to the task of civil and religious liberty.

Since then habits of a low, mean, despicable character have sprung up amongst us which has reigned too long amongst us in our breasts, and which alone can be eradicated from us by the grace of God and a knowledge of ourselves. The habits in particular referred to are those of the commonest kind, viz: swearing, drinking and all their connections, which are all prohibited by the Book with which we are guided—the Bible. But even now they are being cast into the back ground; so well they may for all of us have learned that a continuance in them will tend to demoralize ourselves and bring our illustrious order into bad reputation, and sooner or later overthrow it altogether.

Then are we to ask who has the manufacture of the institution? Who has led us on then far and to the position we now hold? Let conscience answer, people of each have tried their veriest skill to lead us astray, and instinct told us to keep the path of duty, and gave us inclination to better ourselves and be led on by the high and noble principles of our glorious constitution. Insult upon insult has been hurled upon us, and few there are who could vindicate our rights from the very first that few would be heard on the subject. 'Tis not so in these days for the institution soon its need of defence from vile, dasterdly attacks upon it, and he often as the attack is made so often will it be repelled. How quickly did the heart-strings of the order vibrate with injured emotion at the engrossing thought of being openly insulted in the face of Royalty itself, in the face of the son of Britain's Queen, and how each felt alike on the matter. How soon was it made a concluded point that we were insulted and required redress for the same, and that from her Majesty the Queen. which was soon granted, despite the snivelling of the haughty Duke of Newcastle.—The appearance of the honoured personage the choice of the body, to go to the shores of old England bearing the grievances of the many thousands of injured loyal hearts to her whom all honour is due, to her whom all our hearts revere as we revere our own life.

Thus we see the utmost necessity of every man being prepared to defend himself in matters regarding the order. Knowing we need all the information we can obtain from all sources possible, and this can be in the reach of every brother if he will only say so in the matter for there is none so poor in the world but what has a little change at some time or another, and by each putting in a mite the thing of itself would soon be obtained. Brethren should avail themselves of the organ of the order in every county, or in the county to which they belong, and I would be glad to see this county set the example in supporting the organ established therein.

Yours, &c.,
C. W.

PETERBORO', July 30th, 1862.

SIR,—It is not, I can assure you, without feelings of unfeigned pleasure and satisfaction, that I feel myself called upon this morning to testify to you and to the inhabitants of Peterboro, the extreme gratification which I derived from attending Mr. Dunlop's first lecture in this Town, on Tuesday evening, July 29th. The well-known lecturer (Mr. D.) made his appearance at about half-past eight, accompanied by Mr. Dennistoun and others. After having been introduced to the audience by Mr. Dennistoun, who acted in the capacity of a Chairman, Mr. Dunlop commenced a very eloquent and elaborate discourse, which, for an hour and a-half elicited bursts of applause from his delighted hearers. The elegance of Mr. Dunlop's diction, his copiousness of language, his manly and commanding appearance, together with the ease and facility of his gestures, are qualities rarely found united in any public speaker. The eloquent manner in which he described the scenes that occupied the mighty genius of the father of poets, the masterly style in which he depicted and presented to the imagination, the fairy forms that glided the glens of the Scottish Highlands impressed the mind with the lively thought of the awful scenes amid which the great comedian's inimitable fancy loved to revel.

With respect to the second part of the entertainment, the only, and, I may truly say, the best claim it has to the esteem of your readers, is the acknowledgment of the fact, that it more than satisfied the expectations of the most sanguine of the audience. The manner in which he represented the different characters was worthy of all praise. His perfect mimicking drew forth bursts of applause from his attentive hearers.

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, I can not refrain from expressing a feeling of regret, that so few of our townspeople should have been present; but this must be attributed to the fact of their being totally unacquainted with the merits of Mr. Dunlop as a public speaker.

I have the honor to remain,
Mr. Editor, yours very truly,
A HEARER.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR.—In reply to an article from Keene, signed J. M., on the 3rd instant, I feel it my duty, as far as within me lies, to refute that article.

Miss Daniels, I believe, is endeavouring to do good in her day and generation.—Notwithstanding this, her good character and desirable abilities are assailed by J. M. which I will now convert into John Moore and assistants.

It is stated in that article that she "by her affected amiability and declaration, that she was an orphan, &c., so far succeeded as to obtain the aid of some in her movements." Now as for my aid, she obtained it independent either of that declaration or of money; and as for Keene aid, she received none, with the exceptions of the Keene pedagogue posting a few of her handbills. As it happens, the declaration referred to was not made until the first lecture was near a close, and after the first lecture was over she received no aid either from Mr. Moore or any other person: so that he must be under the impression that the abuse which he gave her character and ability in public print, is aid: if so, he ought to have his share of it.

Mr. Moore, I grant, was asked to give publicity to her lectures, but not importuned, as stated. It is said that none appeared from Keene to hear her lecture the second night, with the exception of two boys. while the fact is that there were eight whose names I could give if it were necessary.

It is also stated that because she could not get an audience the second night, that she spoke in the most scurrillous manner of the Keene people, which I here prove to be untrue. The teacher of the section in which she lectured when these imputations referred to were made, and other reliable persons say, "We were present at Miss Daniels' lectures, and heard her speak not one disrespectful word of any of the Keene people, with the exceptions of the two teachers."

Now, it is evident that Mr. Moore implies more than himself and his assistant, for he says, that because of her not obtaining an audience she done so which plainly implies that the spoke scurrilously of as many of the Keene people as would constitute an audience. This is also false, unless Mr. Moore considers himself and his assistant a fit audience for a Phrenological lecture.

It is stated that the science of Phrenology has been insulted, not only by Miss Daniels' lectures, but also by her Phrenological examinations. Now sir, instead of that, I consider that the Peterboro' folks and surrounding country have been insulted by the implication, that they were not so capable of judging as Mr. Moore; and not only so, but Mr. Hagarty and those other gentlemen from whom she has secured certificates of qualification: thus, who, probably have forgotten more of the science than his contracted intellect is capable ever of acquiring. This assertion is made on the ground that she happened to tell one little boy that he might make a man of three different professions. I don't consider that the character of three different persons. Surely Mr. Moore knows the difference between profession and character; if he does not, he ought at once to make himself acquainted with it by diligent study.

Miss Daniels did not go to Keene pledging herself solely to Phrenology: the Misses Burnham, Children as well. It so happened that on the first night she principally on the Home Culture of Children, intending on the second to dwell more fully on Phrenology.

Mr. Moore forgot to state to the public that he was one of the first to stand upon his feet to vote her back to give another lecture, and that instead of going to fulfil his promise as an honorable man would do—for she told them not to vote unless they would come—he went to spend the evening about the marsh and river fishing, as I believe is his habit.

I shall now conclude my remarks, trusting that Mr. Moore will immediately bring to life, light and public, his views on the science of Phrenology—for really I think they shall be funny.

Yours truly,
A LOVER OF FIAR PLAY.

The South West.

(From the New York World.)

The news from the West is not pleasant. The absence of Gens. Halleck and Mitchell has been taken advantage of by the rebels to break through our lines on the Mobile and Charleston road, and commit great havoc on the military stores located at various points. Florence, Ala, has been taken, with the troops that guarded it, and the rebels have penetrated even to the historic region in the neighborhood of Pittsburg Landing, capturing troops and stores and destroying vast quantities of valueable government property. The prospect is not very promising at the West. There are troops enough, but now that Gen. Halleck is east, there is no good organizing head, and the more enterprising subordinate generals cannot move without orders. We fear that the news from the West will be worse before it is better.

The Mayflower a Slaver.

It may not be generally known to all the descendents of the Puritans, that the bark Mayflower, which bore their ancestors to the rocky shore of Massachusetts, subsequently engaged in the slave trade. The venerable Nathaniel Hawthorne alludes to the circumstance in an article contributed to the Atlantic Monthly for July in the following language:

There is an historical circumstance, known to few, that connects the children of the Puritans with these Africans of Virginia, in a very singular way. They are our brethern, as being lineal descendants from the Mayflower, the fatal womb of which, in her first voyage, sent forth a band of Pilgrims upon Plymouth Rock, and, in a subsequent one, spawned slaves upon the Southern soil—a mon trous birth, but with which we have an instinctive sense of kindred, and so are stirred by an irresistable impulse to attempt their rescue, even at the cost of blood and ruin. The character of our sacred ship, I fear, may suffer a little by this revelation; but we must let her white progeny offset her dark one—and two such portents never sprung from an identical source before.

A voice for peace!

To the Editor of the Scottish American Journal.

SIR: In view of the vast sacrifice of human life, by this war, and the suffering which endured, and which is still felt in the armies, it is a sad feature of the struggle that amid the wailings of general distress, the voice of no public man has been raised for peace. From representations which had been made by those who presumed to know, I had thought that the leaders of the Secession movement were supported by the few, and that the many were in favor of the Union and the old Government. The continuance of this fearful civil war during the past year has proven that the people of the South are as much united against, as the people of the North are for the Federal Government. Thousands of patriots who left their pleasent homes and loving friends last year, to defeat the Government, have fallen in battle, or have perished by malaria in pestilential swamps, and thousands more have come home to us maimed objects for life. And yet how inclusive in national results have been all their sacrifices and sufferings! In view of these facts, I for one, as a simple Christian citizen, raise my voice for peace.

Horrible Tragedy at Arthabraska.

(From the Sherbrooke Leader.)

We learned last night from a gentleman from Arthabaskaville, that a shocking tragedy had occurred in the township of Stanfold, about three miles from the station, sometime yesterday morning. A woman named Madame Bourret, who had manifested symptoms of insanity years ago, and before her marriage, and whose husband is now in the United States at the hay-crop there, murdered her seven children, and then cut her own throat. It appears that on Sunday night there was a veillee at her house, and the thing must have occurred between the departure of the guests and morning, for at an early hour yesterday morning, Madame Bourret's daughter, who had been at the veillee, but resided at St. Norbert, called at her mother's to see her. Finding the door closed, she looked in thro' the window, and was then shocked to see eight corpses—those of her mother, brothers and sisters. The eldest of the murdered children, a girl of fourteen years of age, seems to have had a desperate struggle for her life, for the bodies of mother and daughter were lying close together, and the mother had several wounds on her arm apparently inflicted by an axe that was close to the bodies. The daughters throat and arm were cut, evidently with a razor, which the rigid fingers of the mother still tightly grasped, when the tragedy was discovered by the surviving daughter. All the doors and windows were found barred on the inside, thus of course leading to the conclusion that the dreadful deed had been committed by some one inside.

—WHAT WILL MONEY NOT DO.—The late Sir Robert Peel spoke in the house of Commons in the year 1836 to the following effect:—"When I was Chief Secretary in Ireland, a murder was committed between Barrick-on-Suir and Clonmel. A Mr.——had a deadly revenge towards a Mr.——, and he employed four men at two guineas each to murder him. There was a road on each side of the river Suir, from Carrick to Clonmel, and pheasy two men on each road, the escape of his victim was impossible. He was therefore foully murdered, and the country was so shocked by this heinous crime that the Government offered a reward of £500 for the discovery of each of the murderers. And can it be believed," said Sir Robert Peel, "that the miscreant who bribed the four murderers was the very man who came and gave information which led to their execution? Aye! again exclaimed Sir Robert, "with these hands I paid in my office in Dublin Castle, the sum of £3,000 to that

The Mints of the United States have coined since they commenced operations (some seventy years,) the large amount of Six hundred Million dollars, about one-fifth of the whole metalic currency of the world, of which amount $500,000,000 has been derived from their own mines; we are not without mines, but while we feel that they will not produce so much gold, we have the pleasure of knowing there is a sovereign remedy in the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" for sudden colds, rheumatism, neuralgia, tooth-ache, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers, at 25 cts per bottle.

Weekly Commercial Report.

PRODUCE.

Wheat and Flour have arrived in considerable quantities all through the present month, and with insufficient and high freights the bias of prices is downwards. We may safely mark the decline since first week in July, equal to fifteen cents per barrel on Super. flour, and three cents per bushel on U. C. spring wheat. European advices quote dull markets, without any marked change in prices, but the estimates of the approaching harvest shew a full average yield and in some quarters an excess. With these drawbacks and the probability of an extensive diversion of Western States produce to the Canadian market, millers will be acting wisely to buy and sell closely on their production, neither buying grain nor storing flour on speculation.

Account sales from Liverpool, Glasgow and London, appear to favour shippers of butter, and there is an inclination to advance a little in price for desirable lots.

Ashes are dull in Liverpool and an attempted advance has caused a decline. Shippers here we understand have had their limits restricted and will buy only at a reduction. Our receipts this year shew an increase over 1861 of 1727 bbls. Pots; and 731 bbls. Pearls. This is very gratifying, as shewing the increase in a manufactured article, and more especially as the supply has not reduced the value of the article. Shipments have been regular and our Stock of Pots is by no means heavy.

Pork does not seem yet to have reached its lowest point, and prices are discouraging here and abroad.

Flour—Fair demand for Super. No. 1, for local and river trades; low grades not so active, and Ex ras dull. Super ex. $5 to $5.25, Extra $4.75 to $5.00; Fancy $4.60 to $4.75; Super No 1 $4.45 to $4.60; Super No. 2 $4.10 to $4.25; Fine $3.90 to $4.00; Middlings $3.50; Pollards $3.00; Bags $2.45 to 2.60.

Wheat.—Brisk demand for U. C. Spring ex cars, good samples 97c. to 99c.; Afloat 98c. to $1.03.

Corn.—Quiet. Mixed 46c. to 47c. per 56 lbs.; white 53c. to 55c.

Oats.—Offering in small lots at 40c. and 45c. per minot.

Peas.—Scarce and few offering. 77½c. to 82½c. per 66 lbs.

Oatmeal.—Held in a few hands and selling in small lots at $4 75 to $5.00.

Butter.—Shipping lots of good butter in kegs, scarce and in demand at 12c. to 13c. Tinnents being less in favor, are not so ready for sale, but move off at 11c. to 12c.

Lard.—Slightly better, 7½c. to 8c.

Pork.—Dull, and sales retail; Mess $10 75. Prime Mess $9 to $9.26 Prime $8.50 to $9.

Ashes.—not so active. Pots, $6.70 to 6.72½, firsts; $6.80 to $6.85, inferiors. Pearls, $6.55, to $6.60.

TOGETHER WITH A GRAND TREATISE ON THE

ALSO:

A Complete Materia Medica,

or, list of all the principal remedies used in the treatment of disease; including nearly

300 MEDICAL PLANTS, HERBS AND VEGETABLE REMEDIES,

with descriptions of each, and directions for preparing and using them. (With an elegant and correct Likeness of the Author,)

By JOHN C. GUNN, M. D.,

OF LOUISVILLE, KY.,

Author of the old work known as "GUNN'S DOMESTIC MEDICINE."

Also, AN APPENDIX, containing a popular treatise on ANATOMY, PHYNIOLOGY, and the LAWS OF HEALTH; the whole making a large octavo volume of

OVER ONE THOUSAND PAGES,

with numerous

VALUABLE ILLUSTRATIONS!

THIS is probably the best, as well as the most thorough and extensive book ever published, as a Domestic or Family Medical Work. Its author is now an old man, and is probably more generally known as a popular medical author than any man living, owing to the great popularity and extensive use of his old work, which was one of great value, but in the present advanced state of medical science is altogether behind the times. Dr. G. is a graduate of several of the best Medical Colleges in the world, viz.: of Philadelphia, and of London and Paris. He has been a successful practicing physician for nearly forty years; and it can be hardly supposed that any man can be better qualified to write such a work than he is. He has spent most of the time for several years in preparing this work—intending it, as he often remarked, as his last and greatest Legacy to Posterity.

The work contains a description of all the diseases known or common to this country—their causes, symptoms, and character—with plain and full directions for successfully treating them, telling what remedies to use; how to use them, and when; the whole stated in plain and simple language; so that whenever any technical or Medical terms are used, they are fully explained; so that the commonest mind can understand them. The remedies recommended are generally of the simplest kind, such as are harmless, yet efficient, and usually such as are easily to be obtained.

Besides the diseases common to both sexes, the work contains a department on the diseases of Females, and their treatment. Also a department on the diseases of Children, which alone is worth the price of the book to mothers and all who have the care of children.

An important item in the work is its Pharmacy, or valuable Family Receipts, there being more than forty pages of Medical Receipts and Compounds, many of which will be found very important and useful in a family.

☞ Remember that this Book can only be had of the Agent, when he calls, and is not to be had either of us, direct, or through Booksellers.

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen on Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair.

There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States beforementioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurance during the year, contained in 1189 Proposal £454,835 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 991 Policies were issued 359,680 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS on said Polices 11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPAT ON POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees 22,999 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assured under 4,750 current LIFE POLICIES 1,955,95 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS 373,563 3 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE 96,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report States that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his entire approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £93,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 10s 7d, to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £217,821 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinized in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realized on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured; that the total additions to the sum assured, now vest d, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured: and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 15 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

ALBION HOTEL,

L. W. DECKER, Proprietor
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada

Poetry.

Auld Lang Syne Done up in Tartan.

The following jeu d' esprit was written by the minister of a small rural parish near Perth, with reference to the highland belief in the antiquity of the Gaelic tongue.

Should Gaelic speech be e'er forgot,
An' never brocht to min,'
For she'll be spoke in Paradise
In the days o' auld lang syne.

When Eve, all fresh in beuty's charms,
First met fond Adam,s view,
The first words that he'll spoke till her
Was "cummar ashum dhu."

And Adam in his garden fair,
Whene'er the day did close,
The dish that he'll to supper teuk,
Was always Athole brose,

When Adam from his leafy bower
Cam oot at break o' day,
He'll always for his morning teauk
A quaich o' usquebac.

An' when wi' Eve he'll had a crack,
He'll teuk his sneeshin horn,
An on the tap ye'll weel micht mark
A pouny praw cairngorm.

The sneeshin' mull is fine my friend
The sneeshin' mull is grand;
We'll teuk'a hearty sneesh, my friend,
An' pass't fra hand to hand.

When man first fand the want o' claer,
The wind aw' cauld to fey,
He twisted round about his waist
The tartan philabeg.

An' music first on earth was heard
In Gaelic accents deep,
When Jubal in his oxter squeezed
The blether o' a sheep.

The praw bagpipes is grand my frien's,
The praw bagpipes is fine;
We'll teuk't anither pibroch get,
For the days o' auld lang syne.

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Peabody.

The ceremony of presenting the freedom of the city of London to Mr George Peabody, the American banker, was performed at a special Court of the Common Council held at the Guildhall, on the 10th inst. This was done in accordance with a resolution passed unanimously by the court on the 22nd of May last, in appreciation of his magnificent gift of £150,000, to be applied to the relief and assistance of the poor of the metropolis.

The proceeding was the more interesting, as this is the first occasion on which such an honor has been conferred upon an American citizen, and there was a full attendance of members of the court, many of whom were accompanied by their ladies.

The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor presided, and there was a large muster of members of the "upper branch." Among the visitors were the lady Mayoress, Mr. Adams, the American minister, and some members of his family; Mr. and Mrs. Lampson, from New York; Mr. Hall, of Boston; Mr. Somerley, of Boston; Mr. Thayer, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Moon, of New York, &c. The four trustees appointed to carry out the beneficent intentions of the donor, namely, Lord Stanely, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Lampson, and Sir J. Emerson Tennant, were also upon the platform.

The box, which was of the description usually presented on these occasions, has on one side the resolution agreed to by the court, and the city arms, and on the other the arms of Mr. Peabody. It also bears upon it the names of the gentlemen who are appointed to carry out the gift.

The Lord Mayor having taken his seat, Mr. Peabody was introduced to the court by Mr. Deputy Reed, the mover, and Mr. Alderman Phillips, the seconder of the resolution. He was received with a tremendous burst of cheering from the members of the court and the strangers in the galleries.

The Town-Clerk having read the minutes of the former court and the resolution that had been agreed to.

Mr. B. Scott, addressing the new "citizen and cloth-worker," said the duty, at all times a responsible and onerous one, was on this occasion one of the peculiar difficulty, for however it might be permitted to sound the praises of heroes and statesmen, it was difficult and unusual to speak of personal excellence in the presence of its possessor, and he should best discharge his duty if his remarks were exceedingly brief, and couched in the language of congratulation. It must be to Mr. Peabody a matter of satisfaction that in the early part of his career he had resolved that, if blessed in his circumstances, he would set apart some portion of it for the promotion of the physical mental, moral, and intellectual benefit of his fellow-men. This was a noble resolve, but it was not every good resolution that in this world attained its accomplishment. Alas, for the uncertainty of human things, sometimes wish to achive such noble objects but had not the means; others had the means, but had not the heart to practice liberal things. It was a subject of congratulation that by well directed and persevering industry he was enabled to carry into execution his generous intentions, and that the desire of his heart had neither been postponed nor frustrated. It was not necessary that he should dwell upon the details of the munificence which Mr. Peabody had displayed, for they were matters of recorded history, but there were one or two things connected with it which conferred upon the gift a peculiar excellence in the estimation of this honorable court. He had determined to relinquish all interest in that large amount of property during his life rather than bequeath it as a legacy. It was not merely a gift, but a donation from a stranger conferring in that midst. He selected for it, too, a time when untoward and exceptional circumstances had disturbed for a moment the peaceful relations between Great Britain and the United States, so though to some others than his honor there were superior to the claims of nationality, and could alter above the party influence which unhappily prevailed. Although an American by birth, he had always manifested the most kindly feeling to Great Britain and all that belonged to it. On a memorable occasion he vindicated the respect and honor and position of our beloved Sovereign. (Cheers.) He fitted out at his own cost an expedition to search for Sir John Franklin, and now he had again shown that it was one of the excellent desires of his heart that the people of this land and his own, brethern in language and literature, of a common origin, with a common faith, and with a common historical tradition should live together as brethern. That honorable court had always regarded with sentiments of the deepest interest the promotion of civil and religious liberty. The corporation of the City of London had waged war in times past with that intolerance which excluded worthy citizens from municipal honors, an intolerance which drove Mr. Peabody's ancestors from those shores in former times for freedom of worship; and he must assert, as the highest feature of his unprecedented liberality, that he had enjoined it should neither be sectarian as regards religion or exclusive as regards party. (Cheers.) And now, said the Chamberlain, allow me to present to you the right hand of fellowship, and to welcome you as the first American to whom has been awarded the honor of complimentary citizenship. (Cheers.)

The chamberlain then presented Mr. Peabody with the freedom of the city contained in a gold box, of the value of 100 guineas, expressing a hope that Mr. Peabody's return to his native land might be the harbinger of returning peace—peace based upon the lasting foundation of freedom for all.

Mr. Peabody, who was loudly cheered, proceeded to acknowledge the compliment. He said he accepted at the hands of the Chamberlain, with deep sensibility, the very great honor bestowed on him by the City of London, but he was conscious that he did not altogether deserve the generous praise which had been lavished upon him. He was not unmindful of the fact that his ability to make a gift for the benefit of the poor of London was less due to his own merits than the kind Providence who had so highly favored him, and he should have neglected an obvious duty if he had failed to employ a portion of his means to the advantage of others. It was but just to say that in his offers to do good he was not the pioneer, but the follower of many public benefactors whose munificent characters had illustrated the history of this country. He had always held the opinion that among those who had an especial claim to participate in whatever good fortune he might enjoy were the communities in which he acquired the means of being useful to his fellow men, and he should be indeed unfaithful if in carrying out his long cherished design to be forgot the great city where he had experienced so much kindness, and passed so many years of happiness and prosperity. (Cheers) The fulfilment of his resolution, as an American citizen resident in London, was particularly gratifying to him. He remembered with gratification and satisfaction the kindly relations which had for such a length of time subsisted between his native land and that ancient city. From the birth of the nation until the present day, America had seldom failed to find in this country, the stronghold of civil and religious liberty, a willing response to its own emotions of fraternity and good will, and it was likewise to him a circumstance of unexpected happiness if his gift, by reason of the particular time at which it was made tended in any degree to soften the asperities of feeling which have unhappily arisen between the two great nations of the Anglo Saxon family. (Cheers.) If it reminded the people of both countries of their common origin and natural sympathy, he should be fortunate indeed, and should be more than repaid. He was gratified to learn that in banishing distinctions of party and of creed from the application of this gift, he had met with the approval of their distinguished body. Such distinctions faded away in the presence of the common claims of human nature, and it would be unnatural, indeed, if he were to exclude from his regard on such narrow grounds say portion of those with whom his early disadvantages ought to place him in perpetual relations of sympathy and goodwill. (Cheers.) He had never forgotten, and never could forget, the great privations of his early years; and to encourage and stimulate the exertions of the youth of this great city and country who had no reliance except upon their own character and exertions to raise themselves in society, he might be allowed to say that there were few individuals amongst them whose opportunities for a prosperous life were not better than were his own at that age. Let him, then, once more acknowledge the signal honor which they had bestowed on him, an honor grateful to him both as a citizen to the United States and a resident in this great city by whose corporation it was conferred. He reciprocated most sincerely the friendly sentiments the Chamberlain had expressed with regard to his native land, and most heartily did he respond to the hope that its present trials might result in the permanent triumph of liberty and good government. (Cheers.) Most firmly did he pray that his country governed in the spirit which animated the illustrious Washington, and England, under the guidance of its good and beloved Queen, might advance through coming years in promoting those great interests of civilization and humanity which had ever been espoused by these two great and kindred nations. He thanked them also for their good wishes for his health and happiness; and, although he could desire that their generous praises were better deserved, he could not refuse to accept the kind words they had addressed to him. The remembrance of them, together with the memento of the good act has they had presented to him, would ever be present to himself and those near him, and so long as memory preserved his life and gave him power of free action, it should be his duty to attain to the excellent character which the Chamberlain, on behalf of the Corporation, had been pleased to associate with his humble name. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. Kelsey, the Chairman of the Lands Committee, moved that the address of the Chamberlain, and that of Mr. Peabody, should be entered upon the records of the court.

The motion having been seconded, unanimously adopted amidst loud cheering.

The proceedings then terminated.

JENKINS, AND SOME TALK WITH HIM.

The other night I was in my study. I call it my sanctum, I like to buy myself in it for hours. One it seems to me can always study better, meditate better, and write better when alone. I think so anyway, but if my neighbor Grundy thinks otherwise I will not quarrel with him. This is a free country, and if one can speak as he likes, he surely ought to have the liberty to think as he likes. Well, I was in my study, sanctum or den, as you may please to call it; I was not studying, not writing, I was dreamily meditating and watching from the window at which I was seated, the fleecy clouds as they shot along the serene but starless sky. Who does not at times love to indulge in "Awake dreams?" What pleasant thoughts, what fond remembrances come clustering, hurrying like "thronging legions through the busy brain." Our schooldays are lived over again! Pretty little Susan, or Patsy, or Julia Ann, with her bright eyes and nice clean apron, is again at our side roaming amid the little wood, or along the streamlets grassy bank—happy, happy, as could be. Ah, dear, we saw Susan yesterday, but how changed from our Susan of then. I was in deep reverie—reverie, that is the word—not day but twilight dreaming, dreaming of the past and dreaming of the future—who does not dream of the future? We all love to dream of what we may do, and of what we may be; our fond hopes are too often a dream. We hope, and fondly hope on, and when at last we vainly expect their realization and we awake—and lo it was all a dream. Has it not been so with you gentle reader? It has with me, yet I like to dream. It is a luxury that even a poor fellow may indulge in, and most poor fellows' luxuries are scarce enough, and I think they ought to enjoy this. I was dreaming—I was lost to all around me—my spirit seemed borne back upon the current of time. I was young again—I was happy—I was— Hark, a tap upon the door broke up my pleasant reverie. Tap, number two and I was myself again—a hard-working, commonplace, matter of fact old Bachelor or Benedict—suggestive words implying two totally diverse characters. A bachelor no doubt is a miserable fellow, and I am of opinion that some benedicts are not much better. But I forgot, tap number two awoke me, "come in," I cried abstractedly, watching a sea of clouds whose waves of silvery crest were just then surging across the disc of the moon in all their reflected brightness and beauty—"Come in." The door opened slowly and solemnly. A head, a human head, was thrust in, and in a second or so the plump, well-to-do body attached thereto made its appearance.—The body and head, or to give the more worthy member precedence, the head and body rejoiced in the ownership of Jeremiah Junker Jenkins. Before me in propria persona stood J. J. Jenkins. Jenkins is no shadow; Jenkins has a substantial form, you feel his presence. Everybody knows Jenkins, at least they ought to, for Jenkins knows everybody, according to his own account. Jenkins is of a philanthropic turn; he is everybody's friend; you may not take to Jenkins, but Jenkins takes and sticks to you. Jenkins professes to be a gentleman; so know he does not work and he dresses well; that in the opinion of not a few now-a-days is sufficient to make a gentleman; Jenkins we opinionate is therefore a gentleman. Ill natured people do say that Jenkins with his hands won't work, and with his brains can't work, but Jenkins ignores the implied insinuation—Jenkins hates insinuations. If Jenkins has no business of his own to mind, he is great in attending (aforesaid ill natured people say meddling with) to other people's business. Jenkins is always busy, always engaged—at what is yet a problem for future mathematicians to solve. Jenkins is too busy to read—much but Jenkins is always ready to talk upon any subject from Dynamics or cotton cultivation to anything of the most infinitesimal importance. True though Jenkins talks much he does not say much; this I think Jenkins is ignorant of, but no wonder, Jenkins's deafness is a common one. Jenkins has a good opinion of himself—and this I judge Jenkins has a monopoly—Jenkins imitates somewhat in the opinion that what he does not know is hardly worth any. This is Jenkins's opinion, and Jenkins often wonders why people will always persist in differing from Jenkins. But Jenkins's mode is, he is a liberal man—in his views. Jenkins is no longer young, but Jenkins looks young, and his clothes and hair appear well dyed. Jenkins is not married, never was married; the cause why Jenkins says is his never could meet a congenial spirit; ill natured people say Jenkins has tried to try the matrimonial state but in vain; but Jenkins in his own opinion is quite a ladies man. Jenkins says he can't help resembling single, for being a compassionate man he does not like to drive the rest of the female world to dire despair by making a choice. Jenkins is a moral man, and in his opinion far from being a bad one. Jenkins never refuses a principle or havannah, and at times is not altogether disinclined to that, which to change the words of the poet a little, "cheers but to inebriate." "Hallo, Jenkins," said I, quite awake now, "how are you; take a seat." Jenkins took a seat, placed it in front of me and sat down. I looked at Jenkins; mystery was on Jenkins' face, and enquiry in his eye. Mystery and enquiry stood in bold relief from every feature. Jenkins was great. "What's the matter, Jenkins," interrogated I, watching his solemn, wonder changed phiz. "I am well," said he, in solemn tones, and he was more solemn than ever. Now I hate those solemn, long faced individuals; to look at them gives one the blues, and blues lead to dyspepsia, and dyspepsia to—no matter—I could not stand it, and so I burst out with "Look here, Jenkins, what's the meaning of all this; have you been kicked, whipped, getting the mitten, or drinking. "Ah," says Jenkins, rousing up and interrupting me, "I have been thinking." "Thinking Jenkins—you thinking, and survive the operation, no wonder you look so "glum." I exclaimed, coming down with my hands upon his shoulder. "Yes," said Jenkins coming to himself under my feeling awakener. "I have been thinking, I say I have been thinking," and he was emphatic, "that you temperance men are getting a little too rabid in that column of yours. You know I am a temperance man"—he now blushed a little—"and a few to excesses. I want to see the temperance, mark I say temperance, cause prosper. But you must go about it the right way to do this, and it is my settled conviction that you don't go about it the right way in coming down upon the most respectable classes of the community as you do for their apathy and indifference, as you please term it, to the best and highest interest of humanity.

Singing by Young Women.

It was the opinion of Dr. Rush, that singing by young ladies, whom the customs society debar from many other kinds of salubrious exercise, ought to be cultivated not only as an accomplishment, but as the means of preserving health. He particularly insists that vocal music should never be neglected in the education of a young lady, and states, that besides its salutary operation in soothing the cares of domestic life, it has a still more direct and important effect. In his remarks on this subject, the doctor introduces a fact which was suggested to him by his professional experience, which is, that the exercise of the chest by singing contributes very much to defend them from the diseases to which the climate and other causes expose them. The German, he continues, are seldom afflicted with consumption, nor has he ever known more than one instance of spitting of blood among them. This, he believes, is in part occasioned by the strength which their lungs acquire by exercising them frequently in vocal music, which constitutes an essential branch of their education.

Henry Ward Beecher on Newspapers.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in the course of a sermon in the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last Sunday night, made an eloquent plea for newspapers, speaking of them as the most potent elements of civilization. "There is," said he, "a common vulgar objection about newspapers that "they lie so;" they don't lie any more than you do. Man is naturally a lying creature. Truth is a gift from Heaven, and very few of us possess it before we get it there. The newspaper gives both facts and rumors, and they would be blamed if they did not do so. It is for the reader to judge of these rumors. The last economy should be in regard to newspapers. It is better to deprive the body of some ribbon or jewel or garment, than deprive the mind of sustenance."

A FOUNDLING.—Last night a gentleman living on Park street, whom we shall call Mr. S. was startled by the loud ringing of his door bell at a late hour, and on his going to the door en dishabille, found upon the step a willow basket nearly covered with a towel, which by its substantive gave unmistakable evidence of life beneath. To the handle of the basket was appended a neat card on which was written "Call her Lizzy, and treat her kindly for her mother's sake" Mr. S——who is distinguished for his rigid athcroic intentions and generosity of character—had no heart to treat the little innocent rudely. Carefully picking up the basket he conveyed the precious burden to his sleeping apartment, and told his better half what he had found. "Poor little dear," said the lady, who is not disturbed by jealousy. "Is it a boy or a girl? God," said the husband, pointing to the card. Mrs. S. soon unrolls of herself in her dry goods, and removed the linen covering from the basket, when up popped the round, bushy head and twinkling eyes of a puppy of the bulldog species, who seemed utterly at a loss for emotion sufficiently lively to express its delight at being released from the irksome confinement of the basket.—Hamilton Times.

"Your head annoys me exceedingly, said a French nobleman in Paris to a talkative person who was sitting near him at a dinner, and who was constantly suiting the action to the word. "Indeed, my lord," replied the gabbler, "we are so crowded at the table that I do not know where to put my head." "Put it in your mouth," said the nobleman.

—At the late fête at Bourges, on the Emperor Eugenie appearing, the Mayor presented to her a magnificent bouquet of natural exotic flowers set in a rich bubber of gold, with a bustle of red pepper, bearing the arms of the town.

Destruction of the Steamship "Golden Gate."

Loss of 200 lives and $1,384 000 in treasure—the Steamer reported reached—Latest particulars.

From the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, Aug. 7.

It is our painful duty to announce the destruction by fire of the steamship Golden Gate, which left San Francisco July 21st, for Panama, with two hundred and thirty passengers, $1,114,000 in treasure for New York and $270,000 for England. She was burnt at sea July 27th, and one hundred and eighty passengers, twenty of her crew, and all the treasure lost.

The following telegraphic despatches were received this morning:

San Francisco, August 6.

"To Wm. L. Hulsey, 8 Wall street—

"I was saved from the burning ship by lashing myself to the forecastle ladder and jumping overboard; passed under port wheel while under way and received serious injury; was picked up by the ship's boat; remained in it twenty hours before reaching Manzanilla. Poor Flint was lost. Will return overland. Telegraph to my family about my safety and health.

BENJAMIN HOLLADAY.

This gentleman is of the firm of Holladay & Flint, owners of the California and Oregon steamboat line.

Edward Flint, formerly of New York, went out in February, 1851. Left a wife in this city; was a middle aged man.

San Francisco August 7.

"To Allen McLane, President—

"Golden Gate burned at sea near Manzanilla. Two hundred passengers and crew perished. Ship total loss. Particulars as soon as possible.

"FORBES & BABCOCK."

Manzanilla is on the coast of Mexico 1,500 miles South of San Francisco.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company's Steamer Golden Gate, was a splendid side-wheel steamer, 2 067 tons and was built at this port by Wm. H. Webb, in 1850. Her dimensions are as follows:—Length 265 feet, breadth 40 feet, depth of hold 30 feet. Her draft of water was about 16 feet.

She was one of the finest boats on the route between Panama and San Francisco, and was a favorite with the travelling public.

This ship was noted for her police regulations and the rules in relation to fire were well defined, and made plain to all her crew and passengers. It was customary on this route to exercise the passengers and crew in fire duty, and from the meagre information we have in relation to the causes of the fire, it must have, in its earliest stages, defined the efforts of the unfortunate passengers and crew, which on ordinary occasions, would have controlled the fatal element.

The Golden Gate was a fast vessel and could accomodate nearly 900 passengers, besides a large quantity of freight. She was rated at the Underwriters A 2, and her securities against fire were recorded "good." She had two independent fire pumps, and sufficient hose, buckets, axes, &c.

She carried from eight to twelve boats, sufficient to carry several hundred persons.

The Golden Gate was repaired in 1856, '58, '59, and latterly she has been put in excellent order. There is no doubt that the light upper works being thoroughly aired by the tropical sun,have, when ignited, burned furiously, and it was behind the power of man to stay the flames.

Some of the boats, so do ubt, which were stowed on deck, were consumed before they could be launched.

From Mr. Holladay's dispach it will be seen that the ship was in such a precarious position that he was obliged to jump overboard rather than to seek the succor of a boat. The flames evidently spread very rapidly, and no doubt the scene has been scarcely equaled on the ocean.

The following despatch has been received by Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co., of this city:—

San Francisco, August 7.

To Eugene Kelly & Co.:

Steamship Golden Gate, which sailed hence 21st July, took fire twelve miles of Manzanilla, and was burnt to the waters edge. About two hundred passengers lost.

Edward Flint gone. Ben Holladay and Captain Whitney saved. It is thought the treasure will be saved as the ship was beached.

THE INSURANCE ON THE GOLDEN GATE AND HER CARGO.

We have made diligent inquiries in relation to the insurance on the Golden Gate and her specie. It is thought here that the vessel is not insured, but the most of the specie is. The regular shippers of the specie have usually open policies, and the consignees here have no means of knowing the amount of insurance until the arrival of the mail. The vessel is worth from $850,000 to 90,000 at the highest, but as she is somewhat advanced, it is very probable that she is as we stated, uninsured.

The telegraph will give us some of the particulars in the course of the ensuing twenty four hours.

—Mr. Morris Thomas, of the Back Street of Mount Pleasant, shewed us the other day a most extraordinary sample of wheat. The heads are of the largest size that we ever witnessed or heard of; and when shelled, yield a very large and fine looking grain. We certainly think there never was such wheat seen before. Mr. Thomas, in the first place, found twelve heads of this strange wheat from one stalk. Struck with astonishment at its size and fine appearance,he sowed what these twelve heads yielded in the garden, and from this he raised nine lbs. Out of curiosity, he shelled one of these heads and found that it contained 148 grains, all clear and good. Mr. Thomas then sowed these 9 lbs broadcast in the field, and were it not that fully one-third of it was winter-killed, he would have as much as fifteen bushels. As it was, the two-thirds yielded ten bushels, which he sowed in the field and which is now growing. It looks exceedingly well, and promises to be a good crop. The clusters grow closer together then in any other wheat and the head is much larger. Mr. Thomas thinks it is a cross between the "blue stem" and "Soles" wheat. All who would like to see a sample of the heads, can do so by calling at this office.—Brantford Courier.

The Quebec News learns that within the last two or three days the Executive has put the pruning knife of retrenchment into the public Department. Some ten or eleven clerks have been discharged from the Crown Lands, two from the Attorney General's office, and two from the Crown Land Department. In the Provincial Secretary, and the office of the Minister, a number of others have received warning.

DEATH OF SIR ALLAN McNAB.

We regret to have to announce the death of Sir Allan McNab which took place at Hamilton on the 8th inst., in the 65th year of his age. The cause of his death is said to be gastric fever which averted the skill of medical men to subdue. Sir Allan was born in the Town of Niagara, in 1798, and any one seeing him would have supposed him to be much older than he really was. His name is associated with many of the leading political events of Upper Canada since 1829, especially in the stirring affairs of 1837. He was an out and out supporter of the Old Family Compact, and a thorough Tory to the last. The only time that he showed a disposition to yield to the pressure of the times was when he consented to the secularization of the Clergy Reserves and consented to be the Premier of the Coalition in 1854, from which he was ousted two years after. He received the order of Knighthood for his conduct in the rebellion in destroying the Caroline it is said.—At all events he rendered good service to the country in those unfortunate times, and the home Government acknowledged it in thus honouring him. He was the first Canadian who received the honor. He went to England after his removal from the Premiership in 1856, and was induced to contest a seat as member of the House of Commons. Losing the election he returned to Canada and was elected a member of the Legislative Council, and at the time of his death was the Speaker—two vacancies which will have to be filled. It is to be hoped some friend will publish a record of his life, attached as it is with the history of Canada.

THE SANDYFORD PLACE MURDER.

Late files of old country papers give the particulars of a foul murder which was committed in Glasgow a short time ago, the substance of which we shall try and give, condensing as much as possible. The details occupy a large space.

A woman named Jessie Macpherson lived as servant in the house of Mr. John Fleming in the city of Glasgow, called Sandyford Place. She is described as being well behaved, having considerable personal attractions, though between thirty and forty years of age. She had lived as servant in several places in the city and is reported to have been in every respect a worthy person. Mr. John Fleming, his father James Fleming, and his son John, were the occupants of the house. It was the custom of John Fleming to leave the city and proceed to his house he had on the sea cost on Friday afternoons, taking with him his son John who assisted him in the office, and returning on Monday afternoon, leaving the old man and servant alone in the house. One Friday night or next morning the servant was murdered, but, strange to say, the murder was not discovered till after the return of John Fleming and son on Monday afternoon. The old man, who gives his age as 87, or being interrogated says that sometime during Friday night he heard screams as if proceeding from Macpherson's bed room, but thought that there might be some female friend stopping with her and they were merely in play. It was stated at the investigation that Macpherson was observed on Friday evening parting with a female friend at the door. It appears very strange that the old man should be three days in the house with a murdered person and yet know nothing of the transaction. This is accounted for in the eccentric habits of the elder Fleming; he used to cook his own victuals, and buy his own sugar and tea even when the family were at home. He states that he thought Macpherson had gone to see some of her friends.

Shortly after the return of his son the old man found that some of the plate had been stolen. As soon as this was blazed abroad the pawn broker who had received it communicated with the owner, and gave the name and appearance of the person who pledged it. She gave her name as Mary McDonald, living in Vincent street, No. 5, which on investigation proved to be false as the house named was shut up. By a very singular circumstance, an observation from a little girl, the detectives obtained a clue by which they discovered the woman who pawned the plate. She turned out to be a Mrs. MacLachlan living in Broomlaw, a wife of a mate of a steamer plying between Glasgow and Cork, and on the night of the murder it was proved by a woman occupying a part of the same house that Mrs. MacLachlan was from home all night. She states that she received the plate from old Fleming on Saturday afternoon to pledge it, and after doing so he called at her house and gave her £1 for her trouble. This Fleming denies, and when they were confronted she looked him steadily in the face affirming that he was the man from whom she received the plate. The old man expressed the greatest surprise at her statement, saying "Me woman I never gave you any plate."

The mystery by whom hands the unfortunate woman met her death is yet unsolved. The body when discovered by Mr. John Fleming bore marks of severe blows about the head and face. A deal of blood had gone over the floor which had been partially wiped up. Footmarks were seen of a person with a high instep—corresponding to that of Mrs. McLachlan; the old Fleming has a flat foot. Thus far the woman Mc Lachlan is generally supposed to know about the murder. On the other hand it has transpired that the elder Fleming had made approaches to Macpherson and offers of marriage, which appear to have been very annoying to her. She told a friend some time prior to her death that her life was made miserable and wretched owing to the old man's conduct. And thus this brutal murder has filled the city of Glasgow with horror and surprise, producing the most intense excitement from the fact that the perpetrator is yet undiscovered.

MELANCHOLY BOAT ACCIDENT.

We regret to learn of a deplorable accident which occurred at Sarnia, on Thursday evening last, three persons drowned being brothers and sisters of our much respected ministers wife, Rev. Mr. Blain, who preaches in the Free Church in this Town. The Observer gives the following account of the sad affair:—

"Mr. Peter Young, son of Archibald Young, Esq., after closing their shop, went to sell on the river, taking with him Miss Susan Young and their younger brothers, Bruce, William and John. When about in the middle of the river, the boat unfortunately came into collision with a vessel, then being towed up the stream. The boat struck with some force, owing to the stiff breeze blowing at the time, an immediately sunk. Mr. Young made a memoritry and desperate effort to save his sister and hold on by the chains of the vessel, but the swift current carried them instantly out of his reach; he himself miraculously escaped. The vessel's yawl was instantly manned and lowered, and the crew succeeded in saving Wilson. Miss Young and the other two brothers had sunk before help could reach them, if ever they came to the surface. Many boats put off immediately to assist them; but although the broken boat was soon found, there was no trace of those missing. The search for the bodies was continued all night, but up to the time of going to press none of them were found. This dreadful misfortune to one of the oldest and best known families has thrown a deep gloom over the town; and what renders it still more painful is the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Young, who are at present in England, little thinking of the fearful shadow which has fallen on their happy household. To say that the deepest sympathy is felt by all the afflicted family, is to give but a feeble expression of the all prevading feeling in the community. Miss Young was about 19 years of age—a cheerful, happy girl, univer sally beloved. Bruce was 13 John 8 years of age.

New Orange Lodge.—The Caledonia Orange Lodge of the Town of Peterboro' having surrendered their charter some time ago. It is with pleasure that we now make it known that it has been taken up, and another Lodge organized, called the Prince of Wales Lodge, No. 484. Their first monthly meeting was held on Monday evening last. The principal officers are, Rev. Mr. Colwell, W. Master; Mr. James Edgar, W. Deputy Master; Mr. John Smith, Secretary; Mr. Wm. Brownscombe, Treasurer.

Sunday School Pic-Nic.—The Sunday School belonging to the Old Kirk hold their annual Pic-Nic to-day, in that beautiful ground adjoining Mr. Chamberlane's residence, at the West side of the Town; preparations are being extensively made for the amusement of the children by erecting swings, &c., by the committee appointed for that purpose.

Pic-Nic.—A Pic-Nic under the auspices of the Trustees of the Sabbath School, in Ashburnham, was held on Thursday last, in that beautiful woods adjoining Mr. Dunlop's residence, Douro. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. Messrs. Douglass, Beck, and others. Great credit is due to R. D. Rogers, Esq., for the prominent part he took in getting everything in order for the convenience of all present.

Owing to the press of matter on our hand, and a number of advertisements coming in before going to press, we have been prevented from inserting an article we had prepared on the all-engrossing subject of the connection of Canada with the Mother country; besides, noticing other matters of interest.

Photography.—Mr. Ewing having taken the rooms on George Street, formerly occupied by Mr. G. A. Cox, intends to carry on the Photographying business in all its branches. Please call and see his specimens.

A Warning.—The Federal recruiting agents are playing their game of false pretences in Kingston and in Brockville, as well other localities in Canada.—Placards have been posted up in Brockville and a few at the Kingston railway station and other public places, intimating that five hundred laborers are wanted for the Atlantic and Great Western Railway in Pennsylvania. The wages offered are one dollar and ten cents per day. Application to be made at Brockville to S. Rust, "Agent," at the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Wharf. In Kingston the "Agent" in the same business is a Mr. Talbot. That the operation is suitable and one of the many infernal modes resorted to by recruiting agents for the Northern army is proved by the fate of one man who has been allured from Kingston. Mr. Oulette, formerly living near the Railway Station, was induced to leave, in answer to the advertisement, and when making the journey to the place were employed was offered, was unable to obtain anything to do. Being without means to return, he was compelled to enlist as the only means left him of support.—Un. Co. paper.

EDITORIAL RAMBLES.

We are of the unfortunate persons that are obliged, in order to earn our living, to pay strict attention to business, for it is not often that one connected with a newspaper can leave his office for even one day. However in common with others in business we derive a great deal of pleasure in relaxation, for it relieves us from the ordinary routine of toil and gives us an opportunity of breathing the pure and invigorating air. On Tuesday, the 5th inst., after mature deliberation a thought struck us that we would take advantage of the pleasant day and roads, about so-so, and accordingly wended our way in an Easterly direction. The road to the East of Peterborough passes through a rather rolling but still undulating country; the crops on the way appeared excellent, and gave us a good idea of the superior farming skill and indomitable perseverance of the tillers of the soil. Farmers as a general thing do a good deal of complaining, but this year there ought to be little to complain of, for if we can judge from appearances they will be amply rewarded for their labor in a bountiful harvest. For a drive of about three hours we found objects of attraction: admiring here nature in her most "beautiful and complicated developments," and there the works of art in the shape of large and commodious barns and sheds, also some beautifully constructed dwellings, many of which have a dignified and imposing appearance, from which you may infer, and in fact they almost say, that the inhabitants are of the pioneers of this great country, who have by hard labour, industry, and perseverance carved for themselves a home, and have gained the position they occupy as the lords of the Forest, and for which they may justly feel proud. We finally arrived at Norwood. This is a smart and in fact very ambitious village, situated on a very picturesque spot on a branch of the Ooze river, which supplies ample water power to drive a large manufacturing establishment. It contains a number of first rate stores,besides the other trades and callings carried on in towns and villages are well represented. After arriving we found that a good number of Peterboro people were there, consisting of Judges, Lawyers, Dentists, Brewers, Merchants and wandering Minstrels. Seeing so many people we began to make some enquiries what was going on, we were answered in reply that it was court day. Being naturally of an inquisitive turn of mind, and wishing to know all that was going on, we thought after getting through with our business we would give the Court House a call. We did so, and found a large crowd of people congregated for the ostensible purpose, as we were afterwards informed, of hearing a celebrated case which was to come before his honor the Judge and a special jury summoned by the Defendant. This was an action brought by Mr. O'Donnell, of Peterboro, against Wm. Willson for the recovery of $30 with interest, for a sett of teeth made for him last August.—Report says that the Defendant thinking a single life of 50 years did not contain all the blessings which some are led to suppose, came to the conclusion to make some fair Dulcina the partner and sharer of his joys and sorrows. She on her part had no objections provided there were certain stipulations, one of which was that he was to get a sett of teeth. He accordingly went to the Plaintiff for the purpose of getting them put in; the job was completed, and the teeth put in to his satisfaction. So well was he satisfied with his appearance and with the teeth that he wanted to make arrangements to dye his hair. This arrangement we believe could not be made as it was out of the Plaintiffs line of business. Subsequently to this, report has it that the young lady refused the hand of the gay Lothario, and he was so disheartened and downcast with his future prospects that he wanted to return the job to the Plaintiff and actually refused to pay for it, for which this action was brought. The first witness for the Plaintiff was Mr. J. Gall, of Keene, who saw the teeth put in, that he appeared satisfied, walked up town with them, and when he left for home had them in. J. Foley Esq. also stated that he saw the teeth in his mouth, and that he left his store for home with them in, and that an amount of money was deposited in his hands as part payment for them. Dr. Poole was called who stated that the Plaintiff had put in artificial teeth for Mrs. Poole which had given good satisfaction, also, that he considered him a good Dentist and capable of performing either a surgical or mechanical Dental operation. The Defendant called his witnesses one of which appeared in the true "Bob Acres" style. If history records the truth, "Bob" was one of those creatures that was thought to possess an extraordinary amount of courage, but when he got into a tight place it generally oozed out at his fingers' ends. This witness came to the stand with a most defiant look and determined step, but when asked what he knew of the case he commenced with quivering lip, and appeared to quail under the pressure of contempt and scorn with which he was greeted from every part of the room. He was quietly informed that he might take his seat as he knew nothing of the case only what he was told. This person who assumes the euphonous cognomon of Doctor wished to gain notoriety and make himself conspicuous at anothers expense. The respective Lawyers addressed the jury after which the Judge stated the case to them. The Jury then retired and after a few minutes returned to court with a verdict for the Plaintiff. This is the second time the Plaintiff has received a verdict in this case. Mr. W. H. Scott for plaintiff, and Mr. G. Edmison for defendant. Thus ends a very interesting trial. Several other less important cases came off but want of space prevents us noticing them. We returned to the evening after a pleasant trip in which we advanced our interests in a pecuniary point of view, and at the same time giving our readers a knowledge of what is going on in the country.

—Among the recent arrivals at the Dominion Hotel, Montreal, are Messrs. Pergaskie Pestonjee and D. Phoss, of Bombay, India. They are wealthy Indian merchants, who have branch houses in the principal commercial cities of Europe and America. These gentlemen have attracted some attention in the streets of the city by wearing the costume of their country. They were introduced at the Merchant's Exchange on the 19th inst by Mr. David Torrance, where they recorded their names in Indian characters with English spelling subjoined. They are gentlemen of thorough English education and high cultivation.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

Letter No. 9.

GREENWICH AND WOOLWICH.

Twenty-five minutes sail by one of the Thames steamboats and we land at Greenwich, the place where the time of London is regulated, and by which all mariners steer their course. Beside the Observatory, the hospital for invalid seamen, and superannuated man-of-wars-men, attract much attention from the stranger.

At Woolwich, the Arsnel, the Barracks, and the Artillery Parks, are the objects of interest, but there is little stir at these places at the present time.

"THE CANADIAN NEWS."

It may not be generally known, but there is a paper published in London with the above title, which presumes to be the organ of the Canadian Government and people in this country. By what authority the publishers style their paper so, we know not, but if Canadians can get no better representative here than the so-called Canadian News they had better do without one altogether. Even if the publishers showed ordinary civility to Canadians when they call at the office their case would not be so bad. Strangers from abroad are often at a loss to know before leaving home where letters may be addressed to them in London; naturally enough the Canadian News Office would seem a fit place for our countrymen, but this is a mistake. As an instance, a gentleman of our acquaintance directed before leaving that his letters should be sent to the place in question. When he arrived in London, he, after much searching, found the office in a narrow lane off Lombard Street, and was glad to know from the manager that letters addressed to him had been received, but imagine his surprise when they were handed to him to find one of them opened! He drew the attention of the person in charge to the fact, but the only answer was that Mr.——the managing publisher, was very displeased because he was not written to for his consent to allow letters to be addressed through the office. Two or three newspapers received for him, also, had been opened, read, and lost! In ordinary cases it might not be out of the way that permission should have been asked, but when a lapse of five or six weeks was necessary, it was too much, and in any case it was not the act of a gentleman to open the letters of another. Civility, common sense, and decency, do not cost much, and the News gentry might at least be able to afford a little to those who are strangers, and from the country of which they seem to be the mouth-piece abroad. The publishers of the News certainly have a right to do in their own premises, and with their own, what they please, but we caution Canadians who may come this way against expecting much from them.

THE GREAT HANDALL FESTIVAL.

The musical performance at the Sydenham Crystal Palace on Monday, June 21st, was the greatest ever given in London, and probably the greatest ever witnessed in the world. The number of performers was nearly 4,000, embracing the names of the most talented, both of this country and the continent. At an early hour the trains began to pour in their crowds from the city, and the number of tickets taken at the door up to 12 o'clock, M., was 18,000. Among the audience were many of the distinguished of the musical world, and the interest felt in the success of the affair was seemingly great. At first there was an attempt at preserving order, but when the Festival began the crush to get good views was great, and much damage must have been done to the statuary, &c., It was amusing to see persons clambering up beside some bronze figures of the Queens and Kings of seven or eight centuries ago, and others taking places beside the tawny figures of Indian Chiefs and warriors. One group, we observed, were cooly reclining under the plaster figure of a mummified Egyptian Princess, and your correspondent with two or three others got comfortably seated between the coils of a dragon which a metal St. George above us was in the attitude of preparing to destroy. To our left a reclining lady was in the embrace of a marble Cupid, and to the right a young gent was holding fast to a lovely bronze Venus. These were the exceptions, however; the majority were comfortably seated. The performance commenced with the National Anthem, in which all the voices and instruments had full play, producing a volume of harmonious sounds the equal of which was, unquestionably, never heard before. We can give but a faint idea of the extent of the performance, but it may be judged from the fact that the number of violin players alone was 400, and that every known musical instrument was represented. The vocal part too, was grand beyond description, and we feel that any attempt of ours would only lessen the idea of the reality which your readers may form for themselves. The Messiah, the anthem performed, is the most sublime of Handell's great works. The following is an extract from a critique in the London Standard:

One of the choruses, in which the singers displayed their power with the greatest effect, was that which follows the beautiful contralto air, "O Thou that tellest good tidings" (admirably sung by Madame Sainton-Dolby),commencing with the words "Arise, shine, for Thy light is come," to the same theme. This, comparatively speaking, is but a simple chorus, but the full plain harmonies given out by the voices,with all their united force, had a majestic effect. The name may be said of the chorus "Glory to God in the highest," which, being free from elaboration or intricacy, is perhaps best adapted for so large a body of singers. Among the very finest exhibitions of the choir, irrespective of what has been noticed, was the splendid series of choruses beginning "Surely He hath borne our griefs," and including "And with his stripes," and "All we like sheep," which was in every way irreproachable. If possible, better still was "He trusted in God that he would deliver him," and "Who is the King of Glory,' both of which were marvellous examples of choral execution, the former being particularly noticeable for its point and accent. Not to cite further—where, indeed, all might be cited in the way of praise—the choir was magnificent throughout, and must have satisfied everybody present that it was the grandest and most complete body of singers ever brought together in London, and consequently in the world.

We need not criticise too closely the solo vocalists. With one exception, as we have already hinted, their names are honourably and intimately associated with the Messiah, and have been well down in our columns times beyond counting. If it were not invidious, we might select the opening recitative and air. "Comfort ye my people," by Mr. Sims Reeves, and recitative and air, "The people that walked in darkness," by Signor Belletti, as among the supernal excellencies of the vocal performances. The Messiah is hardly the oratorio for the solo voices, but still repportunity is offered to each of the singers to display the very highest capabilities. Mdlle. Titiens sang in two airs allotted to her, "How beautiful are the feet," with wondrous beauty of voice and a depth of feeling which found its way to every heart. As we observed before Mdlle. Titiens' voice has that penetrating power which reaches the remotest parts of the building, and is heard, ringing clear and bright above the band. But this power she never abuses. She is too good an artist to strain her voice, well knowing that no force is gained thereby, and that quality is lost. Nor need she do so. Mdlle. Titiens has one of the most powerful sopranos voices ever heard, and at the same time one of the most beautiful. The impression she made in her two songs yesterday there was no mistaking. Courteous clapping and cheering are not half such real manifestations of delight as suppressed expressions and the profoundest silence during the performance.

The above letter finishes our notes of London in letter No. 8, and subsequent ones, notes in Ireland and Scotland will be our subjects.

Your correspondent,

For the Examiner.

From Our Ottawa Correspondent.

Banks of the Ottawa River, August, 1862.

Dear Examiner,—The Covenant holds good and cannot fail: "While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest shall not cease."

"Man wants but little here below, Nor wants that little long."

is a pretty sentiment, and, in a way, truthful but few as are his real wants, some of them are very importunate; bread to the eater, admits of no denial, it is a question of life; and the present prospect of abundance throughout our borders, should awaken in every breast grateful aspirations to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

In this region no longer are lamentations heard for rain. Copious showers have refreshed the soil, and the promise of good crops are most encouraging. During the last three quarters of July, we had rain on thirteen days. The hay crop, although exceedingly light,specially on old meadows, has improved, and famine prices for fodder are no longer dreaded.

Our fair city is somewhat desolate. She mourns the absence of progress in those preparations necessary to her being fully invested with Metropolitan honors. The result of the labors of the Commissino, and its influence in forwarding or retarding advancement of the works, are matters of interest with Ottawa people—one thing is certain: the loss of the present year is early so. It is to be devoutedly hoped no further nodding to disturb the Imperial choice will arise, and that the Ottawa members will truly believe that Her Gracious Majesty's decision will be like the laws of the Medes and Persians, that cannot be changed. This will lessen their cares and liberate their action, and give them a wider sphere of politics than the Seat of Government question. Perhaps it was an error to refer the choice to the Queen, but when referred, and the reference accepted, Canada was bound to acquiesce. England has been lavish of her concessions—we are the freest people under the sun—she sought not to dictate. We could not agree, and asked our Sovereign to choose for us; she did so. And shall a lady, the most elect, a Queen, the most virtuous and indulgent, receive, at our hands, insult, by even apparent hesitancy to accept the selection made.

Great questions await the action of our Legislators when they again meet in Council, they require great wisdom and great honesty in dealing with these questions, but have we men at the helm possessed of these qualities in a sufficient degree to afford comfortable hope that needed deliverance for the country will be wrought.

Patriotism has evaporated from our land; justice has fallen in the streets, and equity cannot enter. Place, power, and pelf, appear the guiding principles of public men; we want a deliverer: where shall he be found?

Our friends, the Methodists will clamour for aid to Sectarian Colleges; here is trouble. Others must have Separate Schools; more trouble. It was a vain hope indulged when the Clergy Reserves were finally disposed of, that Canada had seen an end of Church and Stateism. Both these questions partake of the doctrine of such Union. Episcopalians may plead consistency in advocating such views, but our Wesleyan friends are without excuse—they ought not to sow this seed of discord in our midst.

It might be thought the Chief Superintendent of Education for Canada West was sufficiently notorious for inconsistency and questionable morality, without adding to the catalogue of his offences—advocating of Separate Schools. Egerton, you have sinned enough for any uncommon sinner, and if you will persist in going further the downward road it were well the summons came. "Gather thy feet up into thy bed, and be thou gathered to thy fathers: Canada will be better wanting thee."

Highly gifted is Dr. Ryerson, and he will figure in the history of Canada. Good service he has, doubtless done in the cause of education; pity his well-doing should be tarnished with so much ill-doing. Consistency, sterling honesty, are wanting in his composition; he confers over much with flesh and blood. As an editor, he fought in the ranks of those who sought full liberty for Canada; see were their labors in vain. But when this was conceeded, and the principles of responsible Government were being acted upon, Sir Charles Metcalfe was not prepared to recognise the rights and privileges of the new order of things, and such got into a game with his advisers. Sir Charles was a shrewd man, and soon found means to gain a temporary success. Division is introduced into the ranks of the liberals—the Dr. was his man—the celebrated letters followed, defending the governor, and the Dr. was made Chief Superintendent.

His appropriation of the interest of public money—the exposure of dishonesty before the Committee in Quebec on the University charges, and now as a climax his support of Separate Schools,—a scheme calculated to destroy our public schools and national education—stamp the character of his reverence with no enviable brand. Had he lived two hundred years ago, Trimmer would have been the term applied to him. How carefully he watches the weather and adjusts his sails to the changing breeze. Mere policy will serve no good end. "An honest man is the noblest work of God."

The rural, romantic Town of Peterboro' and its surrounding neighborhood appear really flourishing in all useful and interesting matters. The accounts in the Examiner of School Examinations, Lectures, Temperance Meetings, &c., are really pleasing. Doubtless you have numerous other causes for congratulation, in the stamp of many of your farmers, the skill of your mechanics, the enterprise of your merchants—the talent and purity of your ministers, and ability of your teachers, but you have a special bl song in your county member. Members of Parliament, or rather candidates to be such, is the easiest obtained article the country affords—a good number, the nearest commodity in the land. The gallant Colonel has a splendid opportunity for usefulness, may he go on as he has begun, may his shadow never grow less.

The number of your correspondents evinces much interest being taken in public topics, very, specially, instructive are the letters of your correspondent in Europe: his "Notes by the Wayside" are worthy of note and being noted. To one of the number who favoured your columns in the issue of 31st July, signed "C. W." With your kind permission I should like to say a few kind words and ask a few civil questions.

Friend, you advocate a good measure in suggesting the utility of getting knowledge by means of a library, but why would you confine its use to orangemen? Freely you have received, freely give; every man is your brother, and you are commanded to do good unto all as you have opportunity If your order really merits the title of "Illustrious," what are the deeds which have earned its renown? Does it instruct the ignorant, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, or comfort the afflicted. Does it use means to convert the Catholic, and thus make friends of foes. Bear in mind if the spirit of religion pervades the system, the duty must be apparent that you are to love your enemies and do good to them that hate you. An Order that counts its adherents by twenties of thousands in Canada, should have something to show for its strength and have a valuable purpose to serve. What is this purpose? Is it to uphold the Protestant faith? The true faith requires no such aid. "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight." The gates of Hell shall not prevail against the Church. The blood of the martyrs has always been the seed of the Church. It is in direct opposition to the spirit of the Bible to fight to uphold religion. "I say unto you resist not evil, when they persecute you in one city flee to another." Is it to assist the civil power in protecting us in the enjoyment of liberty, that the order exists? The civil law acknowledges no such assistance, and it is a reflection on the law of the land to insinuate that such help is required. If to enlighten and conciliate Romanists was the design; here is an object worthy your highest ambition, but suitable means must be employed—processions, and flags, and drums will not serve the purpose—one scripture reader with the Bible in his hand and love in his heart will accomplish more to advance Protestantism and true religion than an army of Orangemen with all the tinsels and tune that ever pleased the eye or charmed the ear. Have you not rejoiced long enough over one conquest? Why not seek higher victories than even the Battle of the Boyne: victories that would make friends of your enemies. In doing so you would imitate more fully the example of the Great Prince of whom every lover of true liberty is proud, and earn for yourselves the approval of the infinitely greater Prince whose dominion is everlasting.

Is there not much in your practice calculated to irritate Catholics, and is it well to do so? Is there any necessity in this day and in this country to keep up the Order. It may have served a good purpose in by-gone days, and it may be Ireland would have been less Popish without it. England and Scotland were as thoroughly Catholic as Ireland; without Orangeism they have made greater advances in reformation. The United States with its many millions of Catholics get on without this Order, and why should it be necessary in Canada. Is our form of Government less, or rather is it not more effective than theirs to preserve order. If neither the Church nor State requires Orangeism, what are its uses? The writer could name a mission that has been the means of converting one thousand Catholic French Canadians who have become not only good Protestants but good christians. If the means employed to anger Catholics were directed to secure their esteem and benefit, who may calculate the advantages here and blessings hereafter.

Respectfully,
Clarence.

A Letter from the Seat of War

We are indebted to Mr. Wm. Arno for the liberty to publish the following letter from his son, who is in the Northern army, in Virginia:—

Camp Phelps, Newport News, Va.,
July 29th, 1862.

Dear Father,—I am well at present. Our right is now encamped 3 miles above where we were a year ago. Things are changed greatly: then there was but 3,000 men, and all woods; now there are 30,000 men, and no woods. Over 70,000 of the main army marched over this Peninsula. Where we are encamped is about half a mile from the place where I got hurt 11 months ago in a skirmish with a party of rebels five times as strong as us, then I had charge. I had a great many changes since then: 2nd Sergeant, Acting Sergeant, Major. About two months ago, four of us resigned on account of some grievances we had. Now I am Company Commissary Sergeant, but I would as leave be a private as anything else I know of. As a foreigner, unless he has heavy influence and sucks around the officers has not much of a chance to rise especially in our regiment, where there are so many striving for a position. I am satisfied with what I am. As soon as my nine months are up, if I live, I intend if the war is not finished, to try and pass the examining board for a Commission. I am now studying military tactics under Capt. Forster, and, if I live, will have no difficulty in obtaining a 1st lieutenant in most of the regiments now in field; time will tell, tide waits for no one.

Your affectionate son,
J. T. ARNOT.

—Recruiting.—The Ingersol Chronicle says that a genteel looking person calling himself Harvey H. Andrus or Andrews, hailing from Detroit, was in Ingersol on Tuesday last endeavoring to induce several young men to enlist in the American army—offering a bounty of $50, and paying expenses to Detroit. He was not long in town, however, before he was politely requested to leave, otherwise, it was intimated, he would be treated to a ducking in the mill-pond, or to a coat of tar and feathers. In an hour after, the young man was not to be seen.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Culpepper, August 10.

A battle was fought yesterday between Gen. Banks and Stonewall Jackson.

The rebels under Jackson and Ewell had crossed the Rapidan in force, and their advance guard 16,000 strong, was attacked by General Banks yesterday afternoon, six miles south of Culpepper C. H.

The fight was almost wholly with artillery at first, but the infantry became engaged about 6 o'clock, and a determined, bloody contest ensued.

Gen. Banks, right wing under Gen. Williams suffered severely.

The rebel position was in the woods, while the troops which attacked them were obliged to cross open ground.

It was not until about 6 o'clock that it became evident that the rebels were attacking in force.

The whole rebel force suddenly attacked in overwhelming numbers at all points.

Gen. Banks held the same ground he occupied at the beginning.

Gen. Pope, on arriving, sent fresh troops to the front to take the place of Gen. Banks' exhausted columns.

Gen. Banks was on the field throughout the action, and constantly under fire.

Gen. Banks is rather severely hurt by an accident. A cavalry trooper ran against him and he was struck heavily on the side.

The losses are very heavy on both sides, and not less than 2,000 or 3,000 in killed, wounded and missing on each side.

Reinforcements under Gen. A. P. Hill, to the amount of 18000 men, reached the rebels last night, at about the same time that ours arrived.

Culpepper, Va., August 11.—The enemy this morning sent out the flag of truce, asking permission to bury their dead. This shows that with all the superiority of numbers, they were too badly cut up to maintain their position, and that their falling back yesterday was from necessity and not choice. Our troops are engaged in bringing off our wounded from the field, and burrying the dead.

San Francisco, Aug. 8,

Hong Kong dates are to the 7th of June. 14 pirates had been sentenced to be hung.

Ting Po, the rebel stronghold, had been captured by the allies.

The French Admiral Brotel, was killed while capturing Margo.

The British Admiral was concentrating his forces near Shanghai to oppose a meditated attack by the rebels.

Hudson Mo., Aug. 10.

Additional particulars of the fight between Col. McNiel and Porter's guerillas at Kirksville, some days since, have been received here. 128 dead rebels were found on the field and buried. Their entire loss could not have been less than 300. It is estimated upon reliable authority that fully 2,000 of Porters Gang have deserted him and are scattered, several hundred of them being prisoners. The balance of his force, which was originally 3,000, is rapidly retiring, pursued by Col. McNiels' troops in four columns. The Federal loss was 8 killed and 25 wounded.

Ingrates.

It has been the policy of both Governments to treat the wounded of both armies precisely alike. Many a national soldier has died for the want of medical care bestowed upon wounded Rebels. This is a tender spot with General Halleck, and it is a part of his policy to which we cannot agree. It is demonstrated that in many cases out of a hundred this kindness is thrown away.

The proudest most disdainful, scornful, poisonous of the Rebel prisoners, are those cured of wounds to the neglect of Union soldiers. Those who have recovered in our hospitals on the Potomac are more confirmed traitors than ever, and they do not hesitate to talk out their sentiments. They say our kindness to them while wounded and suffering, has nothing to do with them when they are well. They even sneer at us, and intimate that if we hope to conquer them by clemency and kindness we are mistaken. It is a fact, capable of substantiation by nurses, chaplain and surgeons in our hospitals, that the officers especially are utterly incapable of appreciating a whit of the magnanimous treatment received at our hands. They are ingrates of no feelings, save of the baser sort, and they only want the opportunity to prove how devoid they

The Strategy of the Potomac.

The nation has been taught to rely upon the strategy of the Army of the Potomac. When the public became impatient at the long stand still at Washington, or the slow movement on the Peninsula, their attention was called to the wonderful strategy of the Potomac. In lieu of fighting we were to have successful tragedy. Manassas was taken without the firing of a gun—by strategy. The evacuation at Yorktown was impelled by strategy. And Richmond was to have been taken by strategy, and the war ended by strategy.

All this was very well, had there been success, but in the course of events it has been proven, that the morality of the army of the Potomac, with less fighting, has been far greater than that of the successful fighting armies of the republic. And with all this great sacrifice of life, our strategetic generals have been out-generaled, and Richmond is as far from being taken to-day as it was four months ago.

The late movements on the Peninsula, however humiliating the confession, exhibit military genius or the Rebel side, and military puerility on the National side. It has always been a fault with Gen. McClellan that he knew little of the enemy on his front, and his want of enterprise in this particular has been the main cause of his failure on the peninsula. After reaching the Chickahominy he proposed to approach Richmond behind fortifications of his own construction, and forwding his plans he proceeded steadily with the work. Dashes into the enemy's lines or military "feelers" were forbidden, as they might bring on a general engagement before the works in the course of construction were finished.

The enemy were attacked only when it became necessary to clear ground for a new line of works. In this way McClellan blindly advanced upon the Rebel capital, at the time, as his dispatches show, possessing, nor caring to possess, accurate information of the strength or intentions of the enemy in his front. He seems to have been strongly impressed with the idea that the enemy must give way as he advanced his piles of dirt.

In the mean time how was it with the Rebels? We will permit them to tell their own story. The Richmond Dispatch, reviewing the late battles, says:

"The plan devised by Gen. Lee was in the highest degree ingenious. It was generally believed that Jackson, after cursing Fremont and Shields, was to march into the enemy's country and transfer the war to his own fireside. Means were taken to encourage that belief, and one of them was to send heavy reenforcements to the valley. When these had reached their destination, and everybody was expecting to hear the sound of Jackson's cannon on the Susquehanna, the public were electrified by the magnificent reconnaissance of Gen. Stuart. From that reconnoissance Lee learned all that he wished further to know, and while the public was still discussing the utility of an operation so full of hazard, the news arrived that Jackson had sent to Lynchburg for all the cars, that he was at Staunton, that he was at Gordonsville, that he was at Louisa Court-house, that he was at Hanover Court-house, with all his army.

"The truth then burst upon the public in its full effulgence. The enemy were to be attacked in flank and rear by Jackson's army, at the same time that they were to be assailed in front by Lee with the main bulk of the army. The plan was worthy of the most renowned general that ever lived; and even while it was in the very agony of projection and had not yet been tried, no man doubted its entire success. It did succeed beyond all reasonable hope, even of so wisely-conceived and well digested an operation. Its success places its author among the highest military names—on the same roll with the Hannibals, Cæsars, the Fredericks and the Napoleons of history.

"The perfect success which attended the efforts of Lee to keep the march of Jackson from the knowledge of the enemy is among the marvels of those marvelous operations.

"By this it will be seen that Lee first ascertained, by a bold and dashing enterprise, the exact position of McClellan, and the condition of his army. He then rapidly concentrated the whole Rebel force in Virginia, blinding the movement by little dashes into various quarters, and then made a sudden attack on McClellan's weakest points. He was enabled to successfully attack him in the front and by the flank, and relieve Richmond of his menaces. The movement was similar to that of Bull Run. The enemy suddenly concentrated, while the National army remained scattered.

"The Rebels themselves admit that had Patterson's army been in command of a General and loyal man, and been marched upon Manassas, they would have been defeated, and their cause ruined. Lee's purpose was to concentrate upon McClellan, and fight the battle on the Peninsula, before he could be reenforced; and in this he was successful.

"When Jackson was marching towad the Chickahominy, and even while assisting in driving McClellan back, reenforcements were being sent to the Blue Ridge, to prevent his approach upon the Upper Potomac! Had McClellan been posted as to the movements on his front, Jackson could have been followed to the Chickahominy, and the tide of battle turned.

"We have had enough of the strategy of the Army of the Potomac. It never will be the successful style of fighting, nor can we hope for success until it is changed. What a happy change Pope has produced on the army of Virginia! Instead of lying quietly, waiting for the enemy to turn up, he is constantly penetrating the enemy's lines, confusing him with his dashes, and learning precisely his position and strength. If Halleck can infuse the same spirit and style into the Army of the Potomac, there will be some hope for the fall of Richmond. —Cincinnatti Times.

Mistakes.

The editors of the News in the West furnishes the following modest attempt at correcting certain rather wide-spread mistakes:

It is a mistake to suppose that the subscription price of a paper is clear gain to the publishers.

It is a mistake to suppose that he gets his white paper for nothing.

It is a mistake to suppose that it is printed without cost.

It is a mistake to suppose that he can live, bodily, by faith.

It is a mistake to suppose that it is easy to please everybody.

It is a mistake to suppose that a paper is worth buying which contains only what one knows and believes already.

It is a mistake to suppose that money due for the paper would be as good to us in a year as it would now.

It is a mistake to suppose that we would not be thankful for what is due to us, and for new subscribers.

The Press on the Debate in the House of Lords

(From the times, July 21.)

We earnestly invite the attention of the Parliament and the people of Canada to the debate which has just taken place in the House of Lords on the subject of Colonial Expenditure, to the issues which it raises, and the principles it discusses. Canada has now her fate in her own hands. No overpowering force interfeaes with the freedom of her decision. She must make a clear and calm review of her present position and her future prospects, and form a distinct and final resolution. A more momentous quest n was never submitted to the verdict of any people. Let Canada carefully consider her own geographical position, occupying, as she does, the great estuary of the St. Lawrence, the inland seas or Erie and Ontario, and the northern and eastern coast of Lake Huron and Lake Superior. Nature seems to have made her the natural outlet for the commerce of North-Western America; and, though she has done much to neutralize this advantage by an absurd fiscal system, enough of it remains to show her what is in her power if she has only the wisdom to employ it. She has a climate which, if severe in winter and oppressively hot in summer, is, at any rate, favorable to the developement of the physical energies and the rapid multiplication of her people. Give her time, and no country may reasonably look forward to a fairer future or a more complete independence be forced upon her, she may easily lose the benefits of all these natural and acquired advantages, and may even sink below the destinies of settlements far less favored than herself.

The chice which Canada has to make is really at this time a very simple one. Will she continue to belong to the Crown of England, or will she join the Northern States of America? We do not doubt for a moment of the answer that Canada will give. She wishes to remain a part of the Great British Empire. She well knows the value she derives from our naval supremacy; she is thoroughly aware of the advantage of English soldiers in times like the present. She has nothing to complain of and it would be strange indeed if she had, when she is permitted to regulate her own affairs exactly as she pleases. We do not, therefore, doubt for a moment what the answer of Canada would be. What we want especially to point out to her is, that in the times in which we live this mere abstract preference is not sufficient, and if she wills the end she must also will the means. There is in Canada, as in most other colonies, a great tendency to self-deception with regard to the real nature of her relations with the mother country. Canada believes, or pretends to believe that the advantage of the union is so entirely on the side of England, that she may treat us as she will without the slightest risk of severing the connection. We beg most earnestly to assure her that in this she is entirely mistaken. England is perfectly well aware that in the union between herself and Canada the benefits fall mainly to the colony, and the burdens on the mother country. We protect the Canadian trade at sea by a navy to which she does not contribute; we garrison her fortresses and arm her frontier by an army which she does not pay; we have allowed her to squander her own resources in her own way, and as a consequence we submit to a tax of five and twenty per cent levied by one part of Her Majesty's dominion upon the trade of another. The separation of Canada from England could not injure our trade, and would greatly benefit our exchequer. Canada gives us no assistance in war, and there is no possession in the Crown so likely to involve us in war as Canada. Let Canada, then, be well assured that there is no terror for England in the threat of separation, and abandon all delusive hopes that England will will be willing permanently to submit to unfair and unreasonable treatment rather than give up the nominal prestige, but real encumbrance, of a vast and exacting dependency. If, then, Canada wishes to remain a dependency of England, she must make up her mind to do those things by which alone that relation can be secured—to comply with the conditions without which the benefits she derives at present from it must, sooner or later, be lost to her.

Having thus cleared the ground, we can state the particular grievance which has drawn from us remarks which we had much rather have left unwritten. As soon as the affair of the Trent showed the probability of a war with the United States, we sent at the very worst period of the year, 12,000 excellent troops to Canada, with a view to protect her from aggression. We had a right to expect that this prompt measure, effected at a great expense, and not without a considerable risk to valuable life, considering the inclemency of the season, would have been met by Canada with suitable acknowledgment. Such acknowledgment we did indeed receive to the full, so far as words went. But it was not in words that we desired to have the service acknowledged. The detachment which we had placed in Canada is far too small to cope single-handed with even one division of the vastarmies which are engaged in desolating the American continent. Should war break out between us and the United States—and were it to do so no one could that we have not sufficient warning—our troops would have left, like sheep among wolves, easy and inglorious victims to an immeasurably superior force. There is great cogency in Lord Ellenborough's reasoning that if the North conquer the South they will attack us in the drunkenness and presumption of victory, and if they fail, the army will seek an indemnity in the sack of our rich and unarmed provinces. We have, therefore, the clearest right to ask that Canada should do her best to defend her own soil, and to protect and assist the force which we have sent to her aid. The Canadian Ministry felt the obligation, and proposed to the Parliament to 50,000 Militia, and a Reserve of 50,000 more—a force quite insufficient for defence against such armies as may be at the disposal of the Northern States. To this appeal the Canadian Parliament has answered by granting first one-tenth of what is asked—5,000 effective Militia, and a Reserve of 5,000 more. We do not doubt that in case of invasion the Canadian people would rise in arms, but it would then be too late. Such raw forces might be effective enough against a mere Militia, but would be utterly useless against troops which have fought in pitched battles and sieges, and undergone the training of a regular campaign. If Canada wishes to expose herself to the alternative, which may have come upon her any hour, of tame submission or the ravage and misery of an unresisted invasion, be it so; but it is our duty to see that the lives of our troops, and the military honor of our country shall not be wantonly sacrificed to a people who present themselves to the world as wanting the first virtue of freemen,—

"Hearts resolved, and hands prepared.
"The blessings they enjoy to guard."

We will not carry this heavy and hitherto unseen load upon our shoulders. Let the Canadians be told distinctly that if they do not make immediate provision for raising such a force as will make the presence of our soldiers something more than a useless sacrifice of valuable life, public opinion in this country will imperiously require their withdrawal; and let them further consider in what position such a withdrawal will leave them. The mission of England is a glorious one, but assuredly it does not consist in training up inert races who value independence only so long as it can be maintained by the blood and treasure of another—who value their strength only as a means of securing physical well being. It is not thus that the foundation of our institutions was laid. Canada, by remaining with us, may enjoy a manly independence at its usual price—toil, labor, self-denial, and danger; or she may fall to the American Union, and take her full share of the innumerable benefits which the genius of Democracy is just now showering in such full measure upon his votaries.

or, list of all the principal remedies used in the treatment of disease, including nearly

300 MEDICAL PLANTS, HERBS AND VEGETABLE REMEDIES,

with descriptions of each, and directions for preparing and using them. (With an elegant and correct Likeness of the Author,)

By JOHN C. GUNN, M. D.,

OF LOUISVILLE, KY.,

Author of the old work known as "GUNN'S DOMESTIC MEDICINE."

Also, AN APPENDIX, containing a popular treatise on ANATOMY, PHYSIOLOGY, and the LAWS OF HEALTH; the whole making a large octavo volume of

OVER ONE THOUSAND PAGES,

with numerous

VALUABLE ILLUSTRATIONS!

THIS is probably the best, as well as the most thorough and extensive book ever published, as a Domestic or Family Medical Work. Its author is now an old man, and is probably more generally known as a popular medical author than any man living, owing to the great popularity and extensive use of his old work, which was one of great value, but in the present advanced state of medical science is altogether behind the times. Dr. G. is a graduate of several of the best Medical Colleges in the world, viz.: of Philadelphia, and of London and Paris. He has been a successful practicing physician for nearly forty years; and it can be hardly supposed that any man can be better qualified to write such a work than he is. He has spent most of the time for several years in preparing this work—intending it, as he often remarked, as his last and greatest Legacy to Posterity.

The work contains a description of all the diseases known or common to this country—their causes, symptoms, and observations—with plain and full directions for successfully treating them, telling what remedies to use; how to use them, and when; the whole stated in plain and simple language; or whenever any technical or Medical terms are used, they are fully explained; so that the commonest mind can understand them. The remedies recommended are generally of the simplest kind, such as are harmless, yet efficient, and usually such as are easily to be obtained.

Besides the diseases common to both sexes, the work contains a department on the diseases of Females, and their treatment. Also a department on the diseases of Children, which alone is worth the price of the book to mothers and all who have thought of children.

An important item in the work is its Pharmacy, or Guide to Family Receipts, there being more than forty pages of Medical Receipts and Compounds, many of which will be found very important and useful in a family.

☞ Remember that this Book can only be had of the Agent, when he calls, and is not to be had either of us, direct, or through Booksellers.

This Book will be delivered to subscribers during the Christmas holidays.

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen on Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumalban, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair. There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States beforementioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurance during the year, contained in 1189 Proposal	£454,835 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 981 Policies were issued..	359,580 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS on said Policies	11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPAT ON POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees	22,999 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assured under 4,759 current LIFE POLICIES	1,966,595 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS	373,563 3 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE	96,786 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report Stated that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq, Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his entire approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £83,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 16s 7d., to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £217,821 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinised in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realised on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured; that the total additions to the sum assured, now vested, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured; and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 75 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

Year ending 31st January.	Amounts proposed for Assurance.	Amount of New Policies Issued.	No. of Policies.	Annual Premium.	Revenue each year.	Accumulated Funds.

To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEWSPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada

Poetry.

For the Peterborough Examiner.

"Man's Inhumanity."

'Twas a dreary night, in London,
And pitiless fell the rain,
The bustling crowd went hurrying by:
The humble and the vain.
The black clouds hung like a Funeral pall,
O'er the City bright,
To the wretched, homeless beggar,
'Twas a gloomy, dismal night.

By the roadside sat a woman,
In her arms a child she clasped,
And she cried "oh! pity, pity,"
And firmer then she grasped
The child unto her bosom,
Now cold with winds so wild,
"Oh, pity me, kind people,
And save from death my child,
For we're hungry, almost starving,
And have nought wherewith to buy
A morsel for to eat, and must,
If left alone, soon die."

The business man, wrapt in his cares,
Unheedingly passed by;
The gay and thoughtless passed along,
Nor stopped to hear the cry;
For selfish human nature
When left to follow self,
Minds not the suffering brother
Who may claim a mite of help.

The shameless, painted cyprian, even,
Whirled along the street,
And looked with scorn at virtue,
Humbly crouching at her feet.
So the hours passed by in sorrow,
Hours of sorrow pain and grief,
But they passed; yet to the sufferers
Brought no succor nor relief.

The morning of another day
Broke forth with streams of light,
And the golden showers of sunshine
Chased away the gloom of night,
All nature sang rejoicing
And everything was glad,
Repose, "the sweet restorer,"
Had refreshed the lone and sad.

By the roadside sat a woman,
Or no, a corpse it was,
And it firmly clasped an infant,—
Dead—hunger was the cause.
Then the corpses claimed attention
Where the living bodies failed,
And to their final resting place
Conveyed,—few mourned or wailed,
But the pitying angel saw them,
And listened to the prayers
Of that motherless the soul had when
It flight beyond earth's cares.

And so dreary nights in London,
Come, and quickly pass away,
And women by the wayside
Starve from hunger day by day,
While our stores are filled with plenty
And our coffers full, replete,
And with every comfort crowning
Our happiness complete.

Oh, Heaven! a prayer, that guided
By counsel from above,
Our hearts may open wider,
With charity and love.
That man to be man's brother
Shall be so in more than name,
Until the world shall rise, and all
A jubilee proclaim.

Miscellaneous.

Butternut Democracy vs. Real Democracy.

The butternut Democrats of the North, such as Vallandigham, Voorhies, Thurman, and Bright, have a great deal to say of the Democrats who are fighting for the Republic. Indeed, it is a favourite practice with them to claim that nearly the whole army is made up of Democrats, and that none but Democrats have the moral and physical courage to face the Rebels of the South. It is true that the appeal of the Government for help was equally responded to by the people of all parties, and we find among both officers and men every shade of former politics.

But the democrats who here pose to the war compose the simon-pure Democracy—the real, hearty, manly Democrats—and are of an entirely different breed from the Butternuts, who go howling through the North as apologists of the Rebels, halting only to sympathize with Rebel prisoners or to hurl execrations at the "Abolitionists" (which means all who are steadied with loyalty.) There is none of the butternut among the Democrats in the army, and they despise as they ought, those at home, who are leading that once grand old party into the paths of infamy. A splendid illustration of this occurred at home the other day.

Colonel Stanley Matthews, a leading Fire-eating Democrat, whose patriotism [illegible] the defence of the Union before [illegible] arduous duties in Tennessee, returned home for a short rest. The Butternuts immediately flocked around him, to get his endorsement of the Butternut Democratic movement. We will let the Cincinnati correspondent of the New York Tribune relate the sequel. He says:

While the reception, Pugh and company of the city have been hanging around the Enquirer office hatching frauds. Colonel Matthews his back otherwise engaged; he was not "posted" in the programme, had just seen the Democratic Congressional Address, and lots of other things in short, he fairly came to this city from Tennessee in a state of utter, hopeless seriousness. Around him they all got—Pugh and the rest—and informed him that all was lost unless the Democracy got the Gubernatorial. What do you think this Pugh said? After, that I should have to record it, but the cry of "union forever" came too late, and the Judge [illegible] Hon.—Col., spoke in the most emphatic [illegible] Said he, "Gentlemen, if it's such a Democracy as we have had for the last few years, I wash my hands of it!"

In the Marrigold, like all whatever British party, or executive politics, was regarded with pernicious influence of the Butternut Democracy in the Southern States. They know that the Rebels draw all their hope of final success from the speeches, writings, and other issues of these debased toadies to an unholy cause. And the gallant men, who charge with the bayonet up to the cannon's mouth, know that the republic has more to fear from the hypocritical canting traitors of the North, than the armed foe at the South. And when they come home, like Col. Matthews, they wash their hands of the unclean thing. Butternut Democracy, may be pleasing to Secession sympathizers, or miserly citizens who prefer anarchy to the war tax, but the gallant soldier, fighting for the Union Democrat or what not, loaths and scorns it.

Fluctuation in the price of Gold.

(From the New York World.)

The downward surge in the price of gold on Friday last is explained by advices since received from Washington, to the effect that Secretary Chase, alarmed at the growing premium on gold consequent upon the issue of legal tender notes, had decided not to put afloat, for the present at least, any but those of small denominations and fractional parts of a dollar, for convenience as a matter of change. The market has since advanced again, as it is seen that the issuing of the stamp currency and the emission of one, two, and the three dollar government notes will be added perhaps sixty millions to the paper inflation, even if not another note is issued of the larger denominations.

We must be prepared for excessive and unexpected fluctuations in the price of gold. The sudden addition of twenty millions to the currency will send it up; the withdrawal of the same amount will have an exactly contrary effect. The internal tax bill, which goes into operation on the first of September, will be a fruitful cause of fluctuation in the price of the precious metals. Large payments of legal tender notes to the government for taxes will lessen the amount in circulation for the time being, and the price of gold will of course fall. In time the payment of this tax will make a use for a certain amount of the government currency afloat, and will give all of it a superior value to the irredeemable bank issues of this country. We will therefore have confusion worse confounded in all values hereafter. Gold will bear one premium, silver another, old demand notes a third, then legal tender notes will have a superior value to the bank paper currency on account of its use in the payment of taxes. All this will create a rich harvest for the brokers, but will cause infinite annoyance and loss to the trade of the country.

There is a prevalent impression that, as a sufficiency of postage stamps are floated to supply the wants of the trading community in the matter of change, cents and silver change will again become abundant. This is a mistake; the inferior currency always drives out the superior, and the more postage stamps are issued the less chance is there for retaining our metal currency.

The cause of our miseries is an excessive issue of irredeemable paper, and until the legitimate business of the country, and not the necessities of the Treasury Department, dictates the amount of paper we shall use, the present unhappy state of things will grow steadily.

Progress of the War.

The general tenor of the news of the week is unfavorable to the Federal cause. The siege of Vicksburg is abandoned.—The great canal scheme which was to have diverted the waters of the Mississippi refused to work, and the fleet and army have retired. The South-Eastern portion of Kentucky is overrun by irregular troops, who give ample employment to the Federal forces, and prepare the way for more regular demonstrations. In Missouri Price is on the move, and no adequate force seem to be near enough to prevent his advance Northwards, and the people rise in his favor as he comes on.—M'Clellan's position is regarded as precarious. Pope is probably rushing into a snare; and if he falls, McClellan's army will be lost. In the face of these circumstances, and of many others, equally discouraging, the war spirit in the North declines. Recruits for the wasted armies cannot be had by volunteering. What would be the effect of drafting remains to be seen; but it would not increase the popularity of the war.

—One Robinson, a dyer, near Saddleworth, has attempted to commit a murder in a very short fashion. The man he shot at was at work in a stable yard, when he heard the report of a gun and felt himself struck in the shoulder. He, turned round and saw the prisoner with a gun in his hand, standing a short distance from him. He asked what he had done that for, and the prisoner said he intended to shoot him, and at the gun had another charge for himself. He would have another shot at him in the morning. It is conjectured that the fellow was suffering from delirium tremens.

—A boy named Edward Delaney, aged 13 years, was drowned off the West pier of the Cobourg wharf, on Saturday afternoon last. He had been fishing with a spear, to which a cord was attached, and it is conjectured that while he was throwing the spear into the water he lost his balance and fell in.

UNPLEASANT RECOGNITIONS.—When our returned prisoners were on Governor's Island, they recognized among the Rebel prisoners there a number of those who had been their persecutors at Richmond and Salisbury. The man who fired at the poor fellow who was hanging his blanket up at the window in the tobacco warehouse, and the man who fired indiscriminately into the eight rations per man were issuing patriotic prisoners area and encouraging by our men. Men.—Col., spoke in the most emphatic [illegible] Said he, "Gentlemen, if it's such a Democracy as we have had for the last few years, I wash my hands of it!"

In the Marrigold, like all whatever British party, or executive politics, was regarded with

Sons of Temperance Column.

JENKINS, AND SOME TALK WITH HIM.

"Yes," continued Jenkins, waxing warm, "it is my firm conviction you are injuring the temperance cause."

"Indeed," said I, "how do you make that out?"

"Why," replied Jenkins, "you alienate a great many good men who feel an interest in the progress of the cause, and who are always willing to give their aid to it and to support it."

"Now look here, Jenkins," said I, looking Jenkins full in the face, "its all fudge with regard to your talking about alienating a 'great many good men;' it is fudge. These men to whom you refer may express an interest in the temperance cause, and apparently wish it succeed, so long as it does not conflict with their indulgence or self profit. In what does their support consist? Do they belong to the temperance ranks? Do they spend any of their money or their time, or influence in going about staying the ravages of intemperance, and rescuing its victims from degradation and ruin, temporal and eternal? No such thing. They sip their wines and drink their 'drams' as unconsciously, apparently as if nothing were the matter. Their interest is all talk. Many of these good men, too, no doubt, belong to the Christian Church, who, if they were anxious to know and do their duty ought, certainly, to be the greatest foes to that which, more than other things combined, impedes the onward course of the gospel chariot, and flings reproach upon the Christian name and profession. Intemperance is that which so does. Intemperance is kept up and supported by the present accursed drinking usages of society. Can Christians, then, consistently, indulge in, or sanction such customs? I think not. I have always been taught to look upon the christian profession and character as something high and elevating, and as indicating upon the part of their possessor a willingness to make sacrifices—and no small ones, if necessary, to advance the Master's kingdom and to aid his followers. Is that not your opinion, Jenkins?"

"Yes," said Jenkins, unconsciously crushing his hat between his knees, "but you know people have different opinions of—duty."

"That is, no doubt, so, Jenkins," replied I, "people have; and it is time our conductors of the temperance column in the Examiner think it their duty to speak the truth—caring for no man that they write as they do. I think they are right in stirring up society to its duty. Society, it seems to me, is bound to protect its members: but a poor protection many of them get. It licenses grog shops by the score, and permits unlicensed grog shops by the dozen to stand at our corners as traps to the unwary, the young, the thoughtless, and the unfortunate. Shall no denunciation be hurled against this state of affairs? Shall it be still allowed to exist? I ask you as a sane man, Jenkins (and I take it for granted you are sane) of something should not be done? Something, yes, something ought (whether it will or not: is another thing) to be done. Look at the matter in a business point of view. (Go to our merchants and ask them to what end to what class most of their losses and bad debts are due, and they will tell you at once to intemperance and its votaries. As long as a man keeps sober there is always a prospect of his creditor being paid; but in the case of a drunkard, there is no prospect. We complain of taxation, well so we might, it is not very light nor very easy to bear. What is the cause of it? In the major part to support the paraphernalia of justice which are necessary to detect, to convict, and to punish crime, committed either directly or indirectly through the use of intoxicating drinks. Many of our children roam through our streets day after day like young bloodhounds, shoeless, coatless, and not unfrequently almost shirtless and trowserless, when they ought to be to school—[illegible] impressions and moral evidences there to think. Their parents are addicted to drink, and spend their money on drink—drink which, adulterated as it is, inflames the passions and destroys the health and reason which should be spent in training [illegible] for the battle of life. [illegible] complex around us every day. Such things are going on, and shall we keep our mouths shut; no, never. It would appal a man to think of the amount of money squandered annually on these "drinks." Squandered, yes, worse than thrown into the sea. Less were, because then would be the last of them, but as things are the "end with the spending of the money is not yet." Our churches, likewise, are not nearly as well attended as they should. How is this? The same cause is at work to prevent it. And our ministers Sunday after Sunday have to declare small congregations, when at their very church doors hundreds there are who never enter, nor have any wish to enter. Intemperance is the source. It is that which breaks up and divides asunder all the relations and ties of society, that makes its members dishonest, immoral, bad. Establish drinking theatres from one end, and erect a glorious change would take place. It would be a decided transformation into a garden, crime would decrease, taxation would decrease, prosperity would increase, and the higher and better interests of the country would rapidly develop themselves in a manner that would bring happiness and joy to [illegible] the principles of [illegible] and despair. Educational, moral, and religious statistics would, in a year or two, show the vast improvement and progress taken place in the essentials of a country's honor and greatness. But this cannot be done without WORK! WORK!! WORK!!! Who are to do this work? The days of miracles are past, and therefore before the ends predicated can be consummated, work must be done. Nothing can be done without work, and just in proportion to the magnitude and importance of the object, must be the magnitude of work and the perseverance in the prosecution thereof."

The Schoolmaster Abroad.

In Emily there is native talent if a lack of Scholastic lore as the two following letters which we clip from the Omemee Warder show. Peter O'Shoughnessy is a mate for Artemus Ward:

To the Editor of the Omemee Warder.

SIR,—Will you be so kind as to admit me space in the columns of your Warder to return my sincere thanks to the person who communicated a report of the school examination at Downeyville, for the eulogistic manner in which he characterises me and the pupils who attend the school. I am sorry that in consequence of the miserable fabrick in which I am bound to impart instruction to the worthy children committed to my tuition that I was unable to give a better test of their abilities. I hope that the people of this locality will take into consideration the necessity of a commodious school-house, in which a teacher may perform his duty with more satisfaction to himself, and all parties interested. I am, &c.,

JOHN CRICKMORE, Teacher.
Downeyville, July 22, 1862.

To the Editor.

Mr. Editor.—It's such a long time since I took up me illigant pin to address you, that I am completely bewildered to chuse a subject from my thrubled brain. However, I think our public affairs deserve a grate deal of attendance from edducated men at the present time. I will for thim raysons give your readers a small bit o' me mind on that respect. Och, murdher, what changes have taken place in the country, and what an ingratetful world it is—nothing a bit of nothing you can git but deceptshen from publick men. Only just think, sir, how long min who was for ever tellin' us that the country was destroyed an' ruined an' murdhered bekase thimselves cud not get into houldin' the raines o' government till they could pass representashen by population, an' make Upper Kanada an thrivin' as a cabbage garden in wet weather. But, rimimber it, when thim same independint min got into the neat the wor lookin' for so long, be the piper, ye cannir seed a gorgeous slither a chanpicken was in such a hurry as the wor to injure parliament, it's manes set it bleegarde. But ma bouchish a merchell, maybe he manes be to make a hurry to make again, after the bars adopted a policy, an' barrid all the perfectshuns ov the couple is the say. My cause isn't Peter, if you don't here of your game clear Grets makin' the ricks out o' your inimist master that ever the rebels did when the parliminit house was gettin mighty hot for him an' the male there way thru the spiler kitchen in Montrale.

O, sur, I feel very bad intirely bekase thim cowardly Yankees won't do nothin to make auld Ingland kick up a row like old thim. Misself an' Ted practishes every avin in the stabel across the ould ashe, an betwen yourself an manel the gore baste gits up on a wheack from Ted as ye never, an bate as asier as the auld man yit and the stirrup, but in a rale ould-fashened ay shtoire, wid nary a bit o' my faice the worse ov a batin, we wor three acts suicide on the gore ivry the last nite we wor practising. Ye see when Ted com out wid the ould gun an 15-shooter, he locked a rale enimy, an' he says "Stand, we must trate to-nite sir." I spoke till him, an' he took hould of the gun, an' tould me to take the pistol in me right hand, an' his ould mother was very angry for joy to see her boy lookin' so hanesome. Well, I tould him "make ready," "presents," and "fire!". He did so I tould him, an ooh me jool, but we wor nearly scarred down wid the skreech that com from me and the waggon, an' this the pig jumt out wid his tale strate over his back, an thinks were the same part, an made for the back bollens an skrinchin as if sum ould scarthry dam, whin we bot frot afther him, an we never cud his party face since—he, shockingly as the Yankees says. So ye see we wor nere having a rale fiarsely tragidy. Let the Yankees fite as long as they like, when they won't come here any. We'll be ready for them if the com ayther for an enimy than ye'd quarter them on the pig's rump, with their prastising.

I rad in the Warder about the Council makin' a lockup in the village, but by the powers if all that passes for a lockup is like it in Smith by leaving a poster prisoner, maybe we pig mate an make an escape. If the door swings back, we [illegible] pig runs out again. PETER [illegible]

Retrenchment.

We are happy to learn that the Commissioner of Crown Lands has placed the agent for the sale of Mookeka lands on a commission of two and a-half per cent., on the lands he sells. Mr. Oliver, the agent in question, was publisher of the Barrie Advocate, and was induced by Mr. Angus Morrison to abandon the Reform party, and become a supporter of the late Government receiving as his reward his present office, and a salary of $4 per day. His new allowance is more in keeping with the extent of his labours.

The Quebec Chronicle says: "It is "stated that the Minister of Militia, Mr. "J. S. Macdonald, has applied 'the broom' "to the office of the Deputy Adjutant Gen"eral, with a vigor that foreshadows "stirring times in the departments. By the "dismissals in this office alone, and without "detriment to the public interest, an ann"ual saving is effected amounting to from "$8,000 to $10,000."

This is something like retrenchment. We hope the good work will go on.

In reference to the Hayes' case, we have received some further information. A western paper said, in defence of the Government, that the offices in the Chancery Court were not under the control of Government, and that, consequently, we were mistaken in charging Mr. Hayes' transference westward to the account of the Ministry. This was an entire mistake. The offices mentioned are under the control of Government, and Mr. Hayes' new appointment was the work of the Ministry. Later, the Quebec Chronicle stated that Mr. Hayes' transfer would not increase the expenditure of the country; that it would, in fact, effect a saving; that four clerks in the office of the Registrar in Chancery had been dismissed, and only two (Mr. Hayes being one of them), appointed in their place. This requires some explanation. There is a great deal of copying done in the office of the Chancery Registrar for the lawyers, who pay so much per folio for the work. This copying has hitherto been done by extra writers, who have been paid not by salary, but by the folio. The quantity of work is very variable, and the present system permits of the number of writers being increased or diminished on occasion requires. The Government now propose to appoint two permanent clerks, with salaries, to do its copying, and to dispense with the extra writers. We are told that the result will be a permanent addition to the well-paid, regularly-salaried clerks, who will be required at times when there is a pressure. It seems to us, that in trying to provide a place for Mr. Hayes, the Government have made an arrangement likely to be injurious to the public service. A notoriously active partizan of the late Government had certainly no claim for any such favour, but should have been dismissed, with the other cumberers of the public offices.

There seems to be no doubt that the Ministry have commenced reductions in the departments at Quebec, which promise the most beneficial results to the public finances. We cannot judge at present of the extent of the retrenchments effected; we only know from reliable sources, that a very large number of incapable and useless officials have been dismissed, and that a still more effectual clearing of the Augean stable is promised. The journals which supported the coalition, the authors of the abuses now being partially removed, are beginning to raise their voices in deprecation of the first practical movement towards retrenchment which we have had for many years. They are trying to make martyrs of some of the dismissed officials, and prophesying that the Ministry will ultimately fill the places vacated with their own creatures. In regard to the latter point, it will be time enough to find fault when the necessity arises, when friends of the Ministry are appointed to useless offices. So far, there has been nothing of the kind. We shall be the first to denounce the error when it appears. Doubtless a danger lies in that direction, and it is well to warn Ministers of its existence; but to accuse them in advance, and without reason, would encourage the error and not prevent it.

As to any dismissed official obtaining the honours of martyrdom in the present state of the public mind, it is simply impossible; and we would advise the political church, whose chief priest is John A. Macdonald, not to try it on. When the public hear of an incapable useless servant being dismissed, they naturally think of the votes in Parliament purchased by John. A Macdonald by the creation of offices for the friends of members. Rely upon it, that those who made the offices, will not be able to make much capital out of their abolition; and we warn them to avoid the attempt.

The wealth of a country is its productive labour. If the Province maintains many thousand drones, who do not labour but live upon the results of the labour of others, by so much it reduces its wealth. Nothing can be more simple or evident. There is no room for dispute. If the Government pursues a thorough system of retrenchment, many persons will be deprived of employment, and forced to seek a living elsewhere. But does not that happen every day in the ordinary pursuits of life? What merchant, mechanic, or professional man thinks it needful to keep a servant in his employment when he has no work for him to do? And why should the Province act differently? Why should we regard men thrust into offices to serve the corrupt purposes of a ministry, as pensioners for life upon the liberality of the state? Would not such a policy tend to increase indefinitely the number of officials, by holding out a life provision as the reward of persistent importunity at the doors of Government bureaux? We are opposed as much as any one can be, to the American system of changing officials at every change of ministry. Every efficient public servant, for whom there is work, should keep his place for life; he should not be turned out of the office to make room for another. If he is dismissed because there is nothing for him to do, he should, if he deserves it, be re-appointed when a vacancy occurs. But not a day should he remain a pauper on the public, receiving wages without work. It is not so difficult in this country to obtain employment, that the people should try to make martyrs of those who lose a place. The country is wide, and the inducements few. Far better to till the soil, than to be dependent upon the smiles of a minister. The vice of office seeking is one of the crying evils of the neighbouring States, and it is hardly less prevalent or destructive in Canada. It makes men betray their principles, sacrifice their self-respect, and abandon habits of self-reliance and industry. Let us not encourage this vice, either by making public offices too certain, easy or lucrative, or by making them an object to us in the States. Let our public officers be few, nicely paid, but not above the wish of another employment in ordinary life, and let it be understood that officials must work for wages like other people. This has not, unfortunately, been the rule in Canada. Officials have been extravagantly paid, and their places have been extravagantly sought after, while work has been the exception, not the rule. It is time this idle system, and the idle idea that the work has been condemned by a thereby test of may Heaven avert—for Canadians to take the field, the Lords and the Shallows press of England would soon discover that Canadians were a mighty party of Irresolutes.—They fondness of the international spirit, they have not the disposition of territory, but they boast of their determination and ability to resist aggressions on their soil, and in defence of their civil and religious rights. A free and independent people inheriting the vigour and energy of the great family from which they have descended, they are confident they have nothing to fear when their just rights are being invaded. Woe to the people that dare be rash enough to try it.

Whilst we thus believe and write, however, we are far from wishing it to be understood that we are opposed to proper steps being taken to have the country put in a proper state of defence. We are very far from advocating a course like that of Sir Francis Bond Head in 1837 in Upper Canada, when he sent the soldiers away, and folding his arms said, "let them come if they dare." This was madness, and had it not been for some prudent practical men the defiant Governor would have paid dearly for his temerity. Such braggart is no sign of bravery but the reverse, as his case proved. We believe that the "price of liberty is eternal negligence," that to be forewarned is to be forearmed. We are in favour of using measures to keep pace at least with our neighbours on the frontier, and of having a better system of militia organized than what we yet have had. The Militia Bill of the last session pleased no body but its projectors, if it even did that, and it was in no ways suited to us at the present time. All rejoiced its failure here, but the method and manner it was disposed of gave opportunity for the severe comment upon us to which we allude. Conscious of our sincerity in our attachment to the Parent land—a spontaneous and ardent attachment—and of the importance, interest and dignity of our connection with it, as well as the prestige reflected on Britain by possessing us as a Colony, we have no fear yet of a separation.

When the apparent differences that have caused the present ebullition of feeling have become better understood our attachment to one another will become more close and mutual. We have no dread of any incursion on our soil, unless a war should break out between the Parent State and America. If that should unfortunately take place it will be seen what we are and what we can do. With less people than there is in London we could raise as many volunteers as they could in all England. We have no fears of any amputation taking place in the present generation at least. When the day arrives that we desire to be separated, it is time enough to talk about giving us up; till then Britain never will let its hold go of Canada; nor does Canada desire separation from her. It is a great pity we are not better known at home, it would save such harsh words and unjust insinuations as were made recently at our cost.

We insert to-day from the Globe a chapter on Retrenchment. We would direct the attention of the Commissioner of Crown Lands to a needed reduction in the list of land agents in this section of country. It is well known that the late Government appointed two additional agents for this county, who were no more required than the fifth wheel for a waggon.

Mr. Hughes who has been heretofore the sole agent for the territory could have managed the whole business for the three, but new berths must be found for their clamorous political supporters, and the Government in yielding has inflicted a serious wrong upon an old, tried, and faithful servant. By the appointment of an agent to the Northern part of the County, Mr. Hughes has but little to do, and his pay proportionately reduced. We seldom come across a more glaring piece of injustice than this. Had Mr. Hughes been a Clear Grit we would have said it was a political retribution.—But Mr. Hughes has always been a friend and supporter of the John A. McDonald Ministry, and consequently his treatment at their hands is most unaccountable. We can only resolve it into this, that so numerous and rapacious were the applicants for office, that friends must be satisfied with small mercies. Another agent is appointed for the Eastern section, who has little or nothing to do—we have not heard of the first settler in his district. We hope the matter will be looked into. Rumour has it that some three or four persons are engaged in collecting the duties in Cobourg, while in Peterborough, with a larger return, only one is engaged. We trust the knife will be, vigorously applied and all useless extravagance lopped off.

It is this cursed system of patronage so called, that has led us into the suicidal course of yearly exceeding our income. If the present Government are honest and energetic in their purposes they will merit the thanks of the country, and obtain for themselves a credit for moderation, that will cover a multitude of sins. Let the chief plank of their policy be economy and retrenchment, and though interested fears may and may, the people will applaud and appreciate a frugal Government, especially when roughly feeling the effects of a profligate one.

ELEGANT EXTRACTS.—Speaking of the debate in Parliament on the Defences of Canada the Review thus alludes to the present Government and the party they belong to:—"It is the price we pay for the inestimable privilege of having plunderbund into our legislature charitable sharpers whose highest estimate of the duty of statesmanship consists in the attainment at any price of office, for themselves or their friends. . . . The existence of a despicable political party has placed them "(the people) "in a false position." Comment is needless, except to point the moral it does. It shows at once the existence and cause of the sudden and bitter and unscrupulous hostility of the great reform party in Canada.

THE QUESTION OF DISMEMBERMENT.

We approach a subject of vast importance to us, and one that we had rather not touch. It is nothing short of this: Is Canada to be separated from the Mother Country? Were the question propounded to the people, there would be but one response from Gaspe to Sarnia, and that would be NO. Never was there a time in our history when the question of separation came up and assumed so serious an aspect as it does at this moment. Never was there a period in our history when the people of Canada were more attached to the Mother Country and its superior institutions, and never were they more decidedly loyal to the British throne than now.—Whence then, it may be asked, does the agitation come from? We reply, from the Imperial Parliament and the British Press. The report of the speech of Lord Monck has been published in England, and seems to have given rise to the unhappy discussion. The Upper House speaks of Canada as being a Province utterly unworthy of connexion with the Empire; several of the members in the Lower House spoke of us in the same strain, but although we had many advocates there, yet those when entering into details and explaining our views failed in showing the real state of affairs or the feelings of the people of Canada, leaving us ample opportunity yet of complaining that as a people we are not known in Britain, nor are our affairs properly understood there.

Lord Bury and the Duke of Newcastle though doing their best, seemed not much better acquainted with us than Lord Palmerston who has never been in Canada.—No wonder then that we feel keenly when we find that we are misunderstood in the Imperial Parliament, and when such unworthy views are entertained of us by the representatives of the nation of which we form an integral part. The press too has been busily employed in disseminating views of us which we feel are false, and altogether we must awake up and seek to put ourselves right before the empire and the world. The Times, the supposed guide of public opinion in England, has put forth many very severe articles against us, and attributing such unworthy and base motives in the course taken by our Parliament when the late Government Militia scheme was defeated, that we feel disposed to resent the insult. We insert an extract to-day from this Journal—one of the least offensive, and containing many facts however that we do well to consider, treating as they do of many things which is manifestly our duty, and which we are apt to overlook. No one person can for a moment doubt the wisdom of our keeping an eye to our position in the present state of the affairs of our Southern neighbours, with a view to be ready to defend the country from an attack. Government should devise and recommend some scheme for this purpose, one that would be feasible and economical, and no friend of the country would blame them to do so. Our position however as an industrious and matter of fact people is not favourable to the development of a military spirit, and hence it is only when an occasion arises for the necessity of our arming ourselves, that a true state of our patriotism appears. Could our detractors at home have been present with the Trent affair took place last winter in any spot or in every part of Canada they would not have spoken nor written of us as they have done. Our loyalty and patriotism then appeared conspicuous, we were ready then—but eight months since—to shed our blood and exhaust our means to defend the honor of old England. Pray what has occupied them to lead us to be such pusillanimous creatures as we are held up to be—such ungrateful, unworthy descendants of a noble stock, that the parent is disposed to cut us off without even a shilling? We answer, nothing! Such as we were but January last are we to-day, and Great Britain has not within her bounds or territories, more loyal, true, devoted men to the Queen and constitution than are the inhabitants of Canada. If deliberately a need should arise—which

THE N. Y. "INDEPENDENT" ON NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

To the close observer of the struggle going on between our neighbours there must have appeared to him again and again that the great trust North has been the bank of men raised to the emergency.

Whenever was declared it was hailed with enthusiasm all over the free States, and the readiness each furnished its share of men and offered its pecuniary aid to prosecute with vigour the suppression of the rebellion showed how popular the war was. The people had a heart in the enterprise, but it soon became apparent that the profuse supplies of men and means were unavailing to accomplish the desired end, from the simple fact of there not being minds to control this ample power.

The first great want was a proper President, then Ministers and Military leaders. The frequent changes in the Cabinet and of the military commanders is proof positive of the correctness of the position assumed.—And if we add to the lack of men the want of a principle, or rather if we consider the nature of the principle upon which the war is waged, it must appear patent to all that a great stimulant to successful conflict is wanting in the Northern army. What are they fighting for? They reply "for the integrity of our Government." True, but while doing so they combat one of the most cherished principles of their declaration of independence, the right of the people to choose its own form of Government. When England rebelled against its King and intolerant Clergy it struggled for civil and religious liberty, and this Heaven born principle nerved the arm of the people and they succeeded. When the thirteen Colonies revolted from Great Britain they insisted upon their right as free men of a free state of having a say in the matter of taxation. This was denied them and they felt as free men always do when their just rights are trampled upon, they arose though but a handful and vindicated those rights and obtained them.

The principle of the South, is dislike to the Federal constitution, and a determination to be no longer under it. If the great principle is correct of all men being born free to pursue life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, has not the South a powerful stimulant to encourage them, which is wanting among the Federals? But we are forgetting ourselves, our object was when sitting down simply to call attention to the following extract from the New York Independent—a loyal paper edited by the celebrated Henry Ward Beecher, an equally loyal man. The extract reminds us of an excerpt from Oliver Cromwell, barring the modern style it is presented in. It presents some mournful but stubborn facts that stand in the way of the success of the North in this sad affray:

"This great conflict, thus far, has been, in every proper and honorable sense, a Campaign of the Common People without a Leader. It is not the nature of democracies to produce leaders. Our times verify the fact. No great national leader has appeared. Fremont had the qualities which win confidence and fire the peoples heart with enthusiasm. But in the sight of five men, each of whom intended to be the next President of a country which their timid and sluggish policy bids fair to put out of existence before the next Presidential election, this was an unpardonable fault. He has been laid aside for the sake of politicians and of jealous teachers of officers, when God never made Generals, and of whom, therefore, West point could make Engineers. Great Military Leaders are born, not built.

"Certainly neither Mr. Lincoln nor his Cabinet have proved Leaders. They have not gone before the people. Their policy is one which has obliged the public to demand each step of advance. They feared division at the North. They feared the malignant fragments of the Democratic Party. Fear was stronger than faith.—They ventured only on those points about which there was unity and eagerness, with the whole community. Even when they advanced, they preferred to have it seem rather like a resistance to a yet further advanced radicalism, than to be a voluntary progress beyond some old landmark. . . .

"The times of our Fathers were not half so vital with the great truths of Human Rights as ours. We are advanced centuries beyond them. We have seen the wonderful outworking of the truths of Liberty on this magnificent continent. Truths that were abstract to them, we behold in living, concrete forms; in laws, institutions, and above all men bred upon this divine pabulum of Liberty. And now, in the Nation's crisis, in a conflict expressly joined on this issue, with a whole world looking on, we can obtain from our Government no word of enthusiasm, no large recognition of the great and everlasting truths of Human Rights, and of Liberty among the chiefest of them!

"There has not been a line in any Government paper that might have been issued by the Czar, by Louis Napoleon, or by Jeff. Davis!

"Our State papers during this eventful struggle are void of genuine enthusiasm for the Great Doctrines on which this Government was founded.

"Faith in Human Rights is dead in Washington. The Administration have faith in America, in the United States, in a United North, in a Republican Party, but no faith in that invisible principle which underlies and nourishes them all! The People are never call to maintain their historic ideas! The Nation is never reminded of its political truths! The People are not reached where their enthusiasm, like the sleeping seeds of the harp strings, lies waiting for some touch to bring it forth, to roll over this continent such an Anthem as the world never heard, and only a free people can chant!

"Let one of those grand old documents be brought forth which our fathers issued before this infernal Slavery had made men afraid of their best faith, and tyrannt only of the doctrine of death. Exhale its lofty spirit! Set here divine in its enthusiasm of the whole human family in the rights obtained by its authors for themselves! How bold, wise, fearless, consistent!

"Now lay by its side the cold, cold, lifeless documents that have come forth from the Government of a Great People enjoying for their liberties, and for the very land appropriated them by the Fathers! Why these state papers of our time are the very graveclothes of the old creed, the very shroud in which to bury the nation that, out of the heroism of the highest act of faith of a generation whose history has consecrated, can take pusillanimous counsel!

"All the piddling questions that are open in Washington, thick as spider's webs on a gas-door, would go down like those flies when a moving machine sweeps round the field, if the Great Historic Truth and its Historic Price had been ridden forth with Courage and Will! But the Administration weaves the mighty affairs of this nation like a lace-weaver, with thread and bobbins piled upon its knee, no wonder that all its tone is consumed in loops, and broken threads, and stitches!

It will be said that there was danger of division by utterance of anti-slavery doctrine! But silence was the very way to cause division! If the people had been roused to this crisis by the great truths of Human Rights, which nerved their fathers there would have been a chain welded which no art could have broken. The want of a National Policy—the want of enthusiasm for a National Principle—the want of any great unifying inspiration by which the Government might draw the whole people after it—leaves the masses an easy prey to mischievous divisions. No thanks to Government that they are not more divided! If there was no more zeal among the people for that Liberty which is the very essence of our whole Political Structure, than there is in many members of the Government and many officers in our army, we would have fallen asunder long ago!

"But we must cease looking any more to Government. We must turn to ourselves. A time may be near when the people will be called to act with prudence and courage beyond all precedent. After strength has been flattered away in mending the manhood of Border-State eunuchs, and reserves have come, and our rulers are fugitives from the proud Capital, should they deem the task of maintaining the sanctity and integrity of the National Soil hopeless, then this Great People, moving through all their states, may yet be called to take up the despairing work, and carry it forth to victory! The People must have Leaders. As yet, they have not found them!"

The Victoria Provisional Council.

We learn from the Osoomee Warder that there is serious trouble in this body owing to the extensive jobbery carried on in connection with the erection of their public buildings.

This jobbery unfortunately is too common among municipal bodies, and is very difficult to suppress. The best safeguard the ratepayers, who have to pay the piper, has, is in selecting and returning honest men to manage affairs. Honesty is a far better recommendation for a Councillor than ability to talk, which many mistake for talent.—The charges made by the Warder, and by a Ratepayer writing therein are of a serious nature, calling for investigation. We give the Warder's remarks:

"It appears from the proceedings of the Provisional Council of Victoria that the public funds are being got through with at a faster rate than the public buildings. We are not surprised at this, when the Chairman of the Building Committee and the Warden assume the responsibility of advancing $1200 to the contractor, who had made an assignment to the City Bank of Toronto, of which they, no doubt, had due notice, thereby leaving the County, if not themselves, liable for the said amount to the Bank. The business of the County seems to be in a deplorable state—the buildings are at a stand still, and the contract likely to pass into other hands at an immense loss to the Ratepayers. This is just what we expected from the men who are at the head of affairs—men who are selfish in the extreme, and who are noted for not being very frugal in the expenditure of the public funds. When one Councillor is paid ten or twelve dollars for writing letters, made necessary by his own blunders, and $30 or $40 to lawyers, for telling him he was in a "fix", and another gets $4 or $5 for running an errand of a few miles, we think Emily had reason to dread Separation. It behoveth Messrs. Cottingham, Stevenson, Thurston, and their colleagues, who are opposed to such wholesale jobbery, and who have the prosperity of our County at heart, to be on the alert and keep the vultures from sucking the life-blood of the County. We hope shortly to see published a statement in detail,—we do not like abstracts,—of the expenditures and receipts, in order that the ratepayers may see exactly 'how the money goes.'"

THE Pic-Nic provided for the young people connected with the St. Andrew's Church and their friends, was held on Friday afternoon last, instead of Thursday, which was wet. The delay was an advantage, as the heat and dust were quenched by the gentle showers of the preceeding day, and the lingering clouds were a cooling shade, such as the green trees alone, otherwise so beautiful, could not have afforded. The swings arranged around the table among the trees, were merrily occupied until the preparations were completed for the tea; when first the young people, then the ladies, and finally the gentlemen were plentifully supplied with the luxuries of life. The meeting adjourned for a few minutes to a grassy hollow, and addresses were given by Messrs. Mullan and Douglass, and after an appropriate prayer by Mr Gilmour, was again dispersed over the ground. The young people seemed specially to enjoy the scramble for apples at the close. Notwithstanding the many clouds and a very few large drops of rain, the weather continued favourable till all were home. The thanks of the young people are due to the ladies who so generously supplied them with the great abundance of sweets, both solid and liquid, which were the centre of attraction to the other amusements, and it is to be hoped that the year's studies will now be resumed with a grateful sense of that kindness that provided this pleasure for their bodies, to persuade them the more earnestly to seek the more lasting pleasures of the mind.—COM.

We call attention to the advertisement of the Royal Insurance Company. It will be seen that this Company stands first on the amount paid to Government, showing conclusively that it is doing more business than any other Company in Britain, and that it is advancing in the confidence and good opinion of the people. If we mistake not it also stands highest in Canada. It is a safe, reliable Institution to insure in, and the public will find in the agent of the Royal here, A. Smith, Esq., Bank of Toronto, an attentive and obliging gentleman.

A PUBLIC EXAMINATION of the Deaf and Dumb Pupils of the Toronto Institution will take place on Friday eve, 29th inst., at 8 o'clock, in the large room of the Union School. The above deaf and dumb pupils and one blind one from this County will be examined by the blind master of the institution.

The Conversion of Sir Allan McNabb.

There has been a large amount of controversy as to whether Sir Allan died a Roman Catholic or a Protestant. The Catholic Bishop of Hamilton asserting that the Knight of Dunboyne was converted a short time prior to his death to the Roman Catholic faith, and Rev. Mr. Geddes, Rector of Hamilton as stoutly declaring that Sir Allan died as he had lived in the reformed faith of the Church of England.

The dispute in no manner effects the public, but must be rather painful to his friends. One thing is pretty clear, Sir Allan could not have been a very good Protestant, or he would not be dallying with Romanism as he appears to have done. He may have thought with Pope,—

"For modes of faith let graceless bigots fight:
His can't be wrong whose life is in the right."

If this was his faith it seems no part of the Reverend deputants, hence the anxiety of each to have it known that the illustrious individual died in the faith which each professes. Our hope is, that he died in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Saviour of sinners.

We insert to-day, at the earnest request of the writers, two communications on the "Daniels" controversy. We beg to decline having anything more to do with it, as it can, possible, be of no interest to our readers. We do not happen to know the lady, but if half we have heard from those who have seen and heard her be true, her disappearance from our midst is anything but a source of regret. A word to some of the writers. We learn from the discussions that two out of the three are school teachers, and in one of their manuscripts now before us, there are no less than six or seven errors in orthography! to say nothing of questionable syntax and composition. We were half tempted to publish it literatim. We must insist that school masters wishing to appear in our columns furnish us with correct spelling in future, as we shall not undertake to correct their palpable blunders.

CRICKET.—The return match was, on Tuesday last, played between the Peterborough and Lindsay Cricket Clubs, at Lindsay, which resulted in a victory for Peterboro, Lindsay winning the toss, put Peterboro' in, when they made the handsome score of 152, Lindsay making only 30 in their first inning, and 42 in their second innings.

☞ The Upper Canada Provincial Exhibition will take place in Toronto on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, and 25th September next. The Lower Canada Provincial Show is to be held at Sherbrooke on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, 17th, 18th, and 19th September next.

Henry who occupies Old Town, 20 miles below Helena, last week, demanding the surrender of negroes within his lines or prepare to fight. Gen. Henry dismissed the flag and started in pursuit with ten days rations.

The Distress in Lancashire.

The subjoining extract is from a letter written by the wife of a Dissenting minister in Lancashire:

I will just tell you the tales of some of my neighbours who came to me for help. One says,—"Missus, have you got an old petticoat of any kind you could give me for really I'm well-nigh starved! My old man has got a day or two's work now, but we are so bad off that we are almost naked; Jonathan's shirt a' scarce got a bit in't of what it was first." Another comes (a widow woman,) "Missus, can you get anything you can give me? My daughter makes three days a week at factory, an' there's on'y us two. I get two shillings from the parish, but it's hard work to live upon that and get a bit of soap and coals—and look at the poor gown! 'tis the only one I've got, and nothing hardly underneath. I had a better gown, but our Mary's obliged to wear it to her work. She can't go without one." Another one came on Saturday, and in a whisper, lest any one should hear—poor thing,—she said, "Mam, could you give me a few pence to buy a little coal? We have not had any fire for two days, and the weather is so cold. There is only my husband and me. We buried our last child when she was sixteen; and now we are old, and have not any one to work for us. I am truly sorry to ask you, but indeed I did not know where to go, nor who to ask; I went to the Relief Fund on Thursday, and they gave me one shilling because there are so many large families on the list; but what is that for two; and we nearly clemmed (starved or famished.)" Now, could I resist such an appeal? Well, so it is day after day, and then my husband comes home, —"I have seen a poor woman to-day, with a little baby three weeks old—oh, dear! the poor mother looks so weak! She says she has not had anything but a little tea and gruel since her baby was born. You had better get a bit of meat, and make her some broth." Then I have to send for a pound and a half of mutton, and some Scotch barley, and stew her up something. It all needs a little fund to go to; but this somehow comes out of my own scrapings.

Such accounts of the distress in Lancashire might be multiplied indefinitely. We hope the prosperous people of Canada will send a good contribution to relieve such wide spread and urgent want. Perhaps all Canada might unite to send a thousand barrels of flour;—and probably our steamship company, which is reaping enormous freights at present, as well as a large subsidy, would carry the flour free. In the absence of any organization for getting up such a token of our good will to old England, Peter Redpath, Esq., of this city, has consented to act as treasurer of any funds that may be sent.—ED. WIT.

Cannot something be done in Peterboro' to assist in alleviating the distress not only in Lancashire but in other manufacturing places in England? We know many would gladly assist if an opportunity was afforded. Who will take the initiative?—ED. EXAMINER.

The Queen! God bless her! No shouts! No hurrahs! But a fervent lifting up of eyes and heart—a hearty invocation of a blessing from above. God save the Queen and comfort her! How universal is that prayer throughout the British dominions. How during the last few days the people of the three Kingdoms have been taught to renew it. God save the Duchess of Lancaster! Out of the county Palatine come sad accounts of want, destitution and famine. There is sore distress fallen on the people there, and they have borne it, as perchance no people ever bore distress before. The angry passions let loose in America have cursed this land as well as that. Gaunt Starvation is a worker here in the employ of the war spirit of the new world. Lord Derby, Lord Ellesmere, and Lord Egerton, of Tatton, and others of the great landowners of Lancashire and Cheshire, remembering the duty that their riches impose on them, have subscribed their thousands to a relief fund, and the good Duchess of Lancaster laying aside for the time her royalty steps into the circle of her peers and claims a share in their charitable work. How well and gracefully she does it, the subjoined letter tells:—

"Balmoral, July 24, 1862.

"My dear Lord Derby,—The Queen has long had her attention and anxious sympathy attracted to the sufferings, so patiently and nobly borne, of that portion of Her Majesty's subjects in the north of England which is connected with cotton manufactures, and which is at present unfortunately thrown out of employment.

"It would have been long since very pleasing to Her Majesty to have assisted them and mitigated their privations; but it was considered advisable to test the sufficiency of the ordinary means of relief to meet this great misfortune.

"Her Majesty has, however, seen with much satisfaction that a meeting has been held, under your presidency, of those who are connected by property with the great manufacturing districts for the purpose of tendering their aid to those living in their own neighbourhood who have been plunged into destitution by no disinclination to maintain themselves by honest and independent labour, but by lamentable circumstances entirely beyond their control.

"The Queen gladly associates herself under her title of Duchess of Lancaster, with these suffering districts, and is pleased to find herself then entitled to send her aid to those for whom she has long felt deep compassion.

"I have received Her Majesty's commands to forward, through you, the sum of 2,000£., to be added to the fund for the aid of the sufferers in the cotton manufacturing districts.

"Sincerely yours,
"C. B. PHIPPS."

His Highness the Viceroy of Egypt has contributed £1,000 to the relief fund; and the board of directors of the Yorkshire Railway have resolved on recommending the shareholders to apportion the handsome sum of £5,000 for the like purpose.

The Illinois Central Railway Company south of Chicago are building eleven miles of Corn Cribs, the capacity of which will be three millions of Bushels; they are erecting these cribs to receive corn in payment for lands purchased of the Company, and the full Chicago price is to be paid for it there. Corn is the great agricultural staple of that country, and the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" is the best remedy in any country where a disordered condition of the stomach, liver and bowels, is combined with great debility, nervous weakness and disease spontaneity, its effects are most beneficial and wonderful, price 25 cts per bottle. —Mr. Brydges, the managing director of the Grand Trunk Railway, is instituting many reforms on the road, amongst which the conductors, who formerly were almost undistinguishable from passengers, have been supplied with uniform made of dark blue cloth with gilt buttons, on which are the initials of G. T. R. of C.

—HONOR TO CANADIANS.—Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to confer the degree of Companion of the Civil Division of the most Honorable Order of the Bath upon the Hon. Francis Hincks, Governor of British Guiana; and upon the Hon. Henry Black, Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Canada.

—A gentleman of the name of Wright, purchased, on the 7th of this month, for $725, of the U. S., the prize schooner "Actor" sold at auction. Mr. Wright was at one time owned by a planter in Alabama; did not like it; laid hands upon himself, and conveyed himself to this city.—N. Y Independent.

—From a report on the railways in India, just presented to Parliament, it appears that the progress in the works on the railways in India has been steadily continued during the past year ending on the 31 December, 1861. An expenditure of about seven millions sterling has been incurred, and 760 miles of new lines have been opened for traffic.

—A loud cry for onions comes from the camp at Harrison's landing. Ten cents in paper for a single onion, because scurvy is appearing and there is nothing like onions to keep off scurvy. The Government is implored to send along some onions. The cry of one correspondent is, "liberty and onions, now and forever, one and inseparable! Send us some onions, and you send us vigor, life, victory. Send us onions."

—The occupation of the emigrants who have left England during the past year are set forth in an official report. The largest proportion were miners and quarrymen, but there were eight hundred and eighty-eight who are classed as "gentlemen," and six hundred and twenty-six joiners and carpenters, while the total number of agricultural laborers and gardeners was twelve hundred and eighty nine. Of engineers there were ninety-five, and of shop keepers over eleven hundred.

—On Saturday evening the steamship United Kingdom struck on a rock on her way up to Quebec. The weather was foggy and the tide low when the vessel struck; and after grinding about two hours on the rocks, the rising tide took her off, but the pumps had to be kept going vigorously till they reached Quebec. It is said that this accident will not hinder her from sailing on her appointed day.

A BRITISH SHIP ATTACKED BY SAVAGES—MURDER OF THE CREW.—On Wednesday intelligence was received at Lloyd's, under date Valparise, June 18, that the ship Anne and Eliza, bound from Boston to Honolulu, which arrived at that port on the 6th of June, reports that, in her passage through the Straits of Magellan, she was attacked by twenty canoes filled with armed savages, who boarded the vessel, and a fearful hand to hand combat ensued; but it was not until eight of the crew were killed that they succeeded in beating them off. The decks of the ship were strewn with the fellows' dead bodies. From being so short handed, the Anne and Eliza was with difficulty brought into port.

DARKIES ON THE SKEDADLE.—A correspondent from the camp at James River says:—The recent discussions in Congress upon the question of putting contrabands at work in the trenches, gave rise in the camps to a story that such a disposition would be made of the services of the gentlemen of African descent now lying around officers' quarters, doing a little light work and considerable heavy eating. The result was quite a stampede among the darkies. Officers boots turned up unblacked, and when inquiries were made it was found that the Sambos had skedaddled, in order to keep clear of the trenches. Negroes who have been free for a long time are found to be serviceable, but the slaves fresh from the plantation will not work. Some worked until they had received a dollar or two, and then cut their sticks; but most of them remove after having worked half a day.

—Parson Brownlow in all his exaggeration of language and approach to the blasphemous, has never yet in any of his speeches, come up to a clergyman in Chicago, in the same line. This reverend gentleman delivered a speech in that city recently, which is of the most objectionable nature it is possible to conceive. He urged his hearers to enlist in the Federal ranks, assuring them that every one who died on the field of battle, fighting the cause of the "Union," went "straight to heaven." On the other hand, those who held back and would not f —STEAMER "MAPLE LEAF" SOLD.—The well known steamer Maple Leaf, Captain Schofield, which for some years past has plied between here and other Canadian ports and Rochester, has been purchased by the Federal government, the amount of purchase being $25,000. Capt. Schofield left here with her in charge on Thursday morning last en route for New York, where he will deliver her. It is not as yet known to what purpose the government intend to apply her. We understand that in the course of two weeks Captain Schofield expects to have another steamer, and to resume the route heretofore run by the Maple Leaf.—Sentinel.

A few Questions and Answers.

Ques. Why does Canada make such a poor show at the International Exhibition of 1862 in London?

Ans. Because her Parliament only voted an exceedingly small sum to defray the expenses of sending Canadian objects.

Ques. Why was Parliament so niggardly?

Ans. Because the country was drowned in debt, and the annual expenditure was several millions more than the revenue, though the latter is about as high as enormous taxation can make it.

Ques. Why is the country in such a position?

Ans. Because its resources have for many years been the prey of dishonest and unscrupulous men, who have rioted in extravagance and secured fortunes to themselves and friends by breaches of trust and other frauds on the public.

Ques. Have the means which ought to have made Canada appear respectable in the eyes of the world, been appropriated to their own uses, or those of their supporters, by the public men entrusted by the country to manage its affairs?

Ans. Precisely so, only the amount needed for the Great Exhibition is nothing compared with the amount of which the Province has been robbed by jobbing and peculation.

Ques. Will the present Ministry institute an investigation into these matters, and fix legal responsibility upon those who have thus robbed the Province and brought it into such straits?

Ans. That remains to be seen; if true men they will doubtless do so.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—Your issue of the 7th inst., contains an article over the signature of "A Lover of Fair Play," endeavouring, alas! in vain to refute a communication from Keene, signed by "J. M." which initials, he says, stand for "John Moore and assistants." Taking it for granted that Mr. Moore is the author of the article referred to, he may rather feel proud than ashamed of such a production; would that I could say the same relative to that of our "Lover of Fair Play." In Mr. Moore's I find the sentiments of the people, not only in this locality, but in Peterboro, Smith, and many other places where this public imposter has directed her course. On the other hand, in Mr. R——'s I find nothing but his own never to be desirable abilities of slander upon the character of his fellow teacher, Mr. Moore.

Miss Daniels proposed delivering a lecture in our School-house, came according to appointment, and after sufficiently securing the windows, got fairly started with her thread-bare, worn lecture, affected for a considerable time to be very sanctimonious but at length, being grieved by the small number present, as is usual with her on all such occasions, fell grievously from her sanctity, gave vent to her slanderous tongue, showed forth the advantage of her desirable abilities by giving all present such unmerited abuse as was never before listened. Not being satisfied with this (she) meeting with a crowd of boys on her way home, fought them with her well gifted organ of speech, three to one—though there were more than a dozen of them. If this be doing good in her day and generation, then I sincerely pray forever to be kept from good works.

Our friend, the "Lover of Fair Play," does not intend by his communication to establish or vindicate the character of Miss Daniels—one who is so universally disapproved, one who has gained but little public patronage at all her meetings, and one whose abusive abilities are only desired, and to a great extent possessed by our friend himself—but rather to depreciate the character of Mr. Moore, who is infinitely his superior, and whose conduct and character place him far beyond the reach of anything which can come from the slanderous pen of our pretended "Lover of Fair Play." By seeking to vilify and blacken the character of another, he only exposes himself to scorn—the public contempt which he aims at heaping upon another will recoil two-fold upon the source from which it emanated. I would inform our fair play lover that in this country no man is sustained by his station, for unless he graces it he disgraces himself.

By rude assault we do not refute the arguments and assertions of our opponents; but by sound solid reasoning based upon truth. It would be well for our friend to study this before again appearing in public with another flimsy communication like that of the 7th, which has neither wit, logic, nor even clever scurrility to recommend it.

An observance of the above, if it corrects not the principles of our "Fair Dealer," will at least tend to have a benign influence on his manners.

Yours, &c.,
O. K.

Otonabee, August 12th, 1862.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—On looking over the Columns of the Examiner of the 7th instant, my eyes fell upon a communication, in which the initials of my name were coupled into "John Moore and Assistants," and in which the author, Mr. James Roberts, under the assumed title of "A Lover of Fair Play," attempts to uphold the abilities of Miss Daniels by heaping stigmatizing insinuations in the form of assertions, opposing the validity of my statements, upon my character.

He, in the first place, intimates that the assistance which I gave Miss Daniels was altogether insignificant in comparison with the aid which she received from him. It is true, that I did not transform myself into a spider, as some of Miss Daniels' supporters did, canvassing the Village on hour and on-half after the time appointed for the commencement of her lecture, importuning people, until some really came in opposition to their will.

He attempts to refute my statement of only two persons from Keene being present at the night of the intended second lecture, stating that there were eight persons whom came to assist (as I may I shall him to do so), and that of these only three were. The philanthropic gentleman in his zeal for the cause of his friend, does not observe that if his statements were true it would only prove an assertion of Miss Daniels to be false: for upon the conclusion of her first lecture she offered to give a second if only nine would attend. Now, if there were eight persons from Keene, as stated by Mr. Roberts, then it is known by many that the worthy trains which accompanied her would have raised the number far over nine.

He then comes forward endeavouring to prove that his friend did not speak disrespectfully of the Keene people. I repeat that she did, and my assertion is corroborated by the evidence of several reputable characters; this need not be considered strange, as she also spoke of the flourishing Town of Peterborough, as one of the vilest dens of degradation.

Her worthy supporters speaks of her as having certificates of qualification; however this cannot always be looked to as a test of character or ability, as credentials are very often given to persons of inferior merit.

In defending the imaginary abilities of Miss Daniels, Mr. Roberts makes a new version of my statement in reference to the boy getting different examinations: for from Mr. Roberts' article it would appear that she examined him only once, while such was not the case. She phrenologically examined him three separate times, and each time told him that he was best adapted to some particular profession, differing widely from the preceding. Now, I know Mr. Roberts differs from all modern grammarians in his principles of language, taking his late article as a test, yet I cannot see where the principle in the English language is that allows each of three compared things to be the best.

The worthy gentleman concludes his series of stigmatisings the fact of laying before the public the fact of J. M. perpetrating the enormous crime of fishing: for he says, "he went about the marsh and river 'as is his habit.'" However, I cannot perceive wherein my excursion chronicler sees such exorbitance of crime in that act.

I will now conclude by intimating to Mr. Roberts the great disparity in his acts; for he speaks of my contracted intellect &c. surely then he must have been abandoned by his sympathetic feeling intimated in the first of his article, when finishing it, or he never would have written in such a style, that not only could I not comprehend parts of it, but he might safely defy a Philadelphia lawyer to analyze some of its paragraphs.

FIRE INSURANCE.

THE following table compiled from the official returns, exhibits, at a glance, the increase of duty paid to the Government by the different Insurance Offices, metropolitan and provincial, during the year 1861.

THE "ROYAL,"

or, list of all the principal remedies used in the treatment of disease, including nearly

300 MEDICAL PLANTS, SEEDS AND VEGETABLE REMEDIES,

with descriptions of each, and directions for preparing and using them. (With an elegant and correct Likeness of the Author,)

By JOHN C. GUNN, M. D.,

OF LOUISVILLE, KY.,

Author of the old work known as "GUNN'S DOMESTIC MEDICINE."

Also, AN APPENDIX, containg a popular treatise on ANATOMY, PHYSIOLOGY, and the LAWS OF HEALTH; the whole making a large octavo volume of

OVER ONE THOUSAND PAGES,

with numerous

VALUABLE ILLUSTRATIONS!

THIS is probably the best, as well as the most thorough and extensive book ever published, as a Domestic or Family Medical Work. Its author is now an old man, and is probably more generally known as a popular medical author than any man living, owing to the great popularity and extensive use of his old work, which was one of great value, but in the present advanced state of medical science is altogether behind the times. Dr. G. is a graduate of several of the best Medical Colleges in the world, viz.: of Philadelphia, and of London and Paris. He has been a successful practicing physician for nearly forty years; and it can be hardly supposed that any man can be better qualified to write such a work than he is. He has spent most of the time for several years in preparing this work—intending it, as he often remarked, as his last, and greatest Legacy to Posterity.

The work contains a description of all the diseases known or common in this country—their causes, symptoms, and character—with plain and full directions for successfully treating them, telling what remedies to use; how to use them, and when; the whole stated in plain and simple language; or whenever any technical or Medical terms are used, they are fully explained; so that the youngest mind can understand them. The Treatment recommended is generally of the simplest kind—such as can be had, yet efficient, and usually such as can easily be obtained.

Besides containing a description of all the diseases known or common in this country, the causes and symptoms of the diseases of Females, and their treatment. Also a description of the Nature, Symptoms, Causes, Treatment and Cure of Diseases of Children, and all the Forms of Disease of Infancy.

An Important item in the work is its Pharmacy, of which it fully treats, there being more than forty pages of Receipts, many of which are Compounds, many of which will be found very important and useful in a family.

The Publishers feel that they are safe in saying that this work is the cheapest ever published in this country, as it contains as much matter as any work of the kind, and will be sold at a low price.

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT . . . DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen on Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair.

There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States beforementioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurances during the year, contained in 1180 Proposal	£454,833 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 981 Policies were issued..	339,680 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS on said Policies	11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPATON POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees	22,999 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assumed under 4,758 currens LIFE POLICIES	1,855,95 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS	378,563 3 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE	96,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report States that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his entire approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £63,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 16s 7d., to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £217,821 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinized in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realized on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured: that the total additions to the sum assured, now vested, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured; and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 75 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

Poetry.

The People's Cry.

Oh! for a man
To lead the van,
With victory on his brow!
No, no delay,
Not for a day!
On, on to Richmond now!

McClellan fails!
In dust he dwells
Our flag triumphant, low!
Oh, God! we're mad
And sore and sad
To think that it is so!

Upon that face
You cannot trace
The Hero, stamped of God!
No fire from Heaven
To it was given—
'Tis but of common sod!

He said he would
The rebel brood
Push close against the wall!
Give him but time
And reason, rhyme,
He'd teach full well to all!

Sure of success,
See what a mess
He's got us all into!
Secession's head,
Guerilla's tread,
Are seen and heard anew!

Give us the man
Who will and can
Lead on to Richmond now!
Who will not wait
To force from fate
A garland for his brow.

And then be driven
(Oh! patience heaven!)
To seek another base;
While dead in heaps,
The country weeps,
Because he's out of place.

Oh! for a man
Who will and can
Lead on to victory!
Till death we'll go
If we but know
'Tis not for strategy!

Oh! glorious West,
Forever blest,
And to the patriot dear!
Thou hast not slept
Till thou has swept
The Mississippi clear!

Oh! for the man
To lead our van
With victory on his brow!
Who'll not delay,
No, not a day!
But move on Richmond now!

Miscellaneous.

Count Cavour; or Quackery and High Living.

An Italian nobleman, and of the very greatest of living statesmen, died recently at the close of his fifty second year. America, England, France and Italy sincerely regret his death, as did the friends of human liberty everywhere. He ought to have lived at least twenty years longer, and used the power which long experience, a great intellect, and gigantic political abilities gave him for good, for Sardinia, for united Italy, and for mankind. But he died before his time, while in the very zenith of his power, his efficiency and his fame, as many great men have done before, in consequence first of yielding to the gratifications of the animal appetites; and second, by the weak presumption, not uncommon with smaller minds, of prescribing for himself, of being his own physician. The public record of his case is: "He died of congestion of the brain, arising from intense occupation, want of bodily exercise, and either too strong an appetite, or else an excessive indulgence in the pleasures of his well appointed table." In plainer language he died of apoplexy, from eating too much and exercising too little. In fact, the great Count could govern a nation better than he could govern himself. His presumption completed the ruin of his manly frame and once vigorous constitution. We have all read of the Roman ruler who loved eating so well, that when he had swallowed as much as his paunch could possibly hold, he would take an emetic that he might repeat the pleasure. Count Cavour had for a long time been a great feeder, and as he persisted in taking no more exercise, he made too much blood, and that, too of bad quality; and being a great thinker, this attracted the blood to the head faster than it could be conveyed away by the sluggish veins; hence, there was such a great accumulation that the brain was compressed, crowded, and the powers of life were for the moment in a state of aggression. He had found out, in previous milder attacks, that the quickest way to get relieved of the surplus blood was to open a vein in the arm and speedily "Richard was himself again." But in this last attack, having no medical knowledge beyond the general fact that bleeding had relieved him before, he inferred that it would do so again, and that the only rule to govern himself by was to let the blood flow until he was relieved, and so often as the symptoms returned. The result was, that he did not send for his physician, but for a professional bleeder, whose whole duty consisted in opening a vein, and letting the blood run until he was ordered to stop it. Hence neither the bleeder nor the Count's physicians were to blame, because he was in effect bled to death before he consulted his physicians at all. It is admitted that "Count Cavour was bled to death." He was bled seven times; but by his own directions given to a non-medical man.—Hall's Journal.

CONFESSION OF THE FORESCOPHIGON MURDER.—Gilbert has confessed. He says he has to wait for Miss Till, and when she came near the dock he pounced upon her, and threatened, but did not kill her. She then held her hands behind her, used her very brutally, and left her there alive, but shortly heard and dragged her up the dock, and then left her dead; but some how undoes her hands, or, when the body was found, they were not tied. He is to make next Monday.

JENKINS AND SOME TALK WITH HIM.

(CONCLUDED.)

"But," said Jenkins, uneasily seeking to change the subject, and endeavouring to straighten his hat which had become a little out of shape in the conversation, "though what you say may hold true, in the main what I object to in your placing those who simply take a glass in the same category as those who are unable to take care of themselves. Now there are Brother Smudge, Elder Smith, and Deacon Brands, good men and true, whose characters stand as high in community as any man's, and they take their glass and it does them no harm, and I don't believe they imagine they are committing a heinous sin." And Jenkins smiled triumphantly and with all the air of a conqueror at a discomfited foe as he said this.

"Ah! Jenkins," I replied. "You have changed the conversation; but I will not object. When subjects are disagreeable we are apt to wish to get rid of them.—When home truths are told—if they don't suit—we do our best to get out of their hearing. It is human nature. Therefore, Jenkins, I don't blame you for so doing.—Now for a moment allow me to look at your statement. You say we put such men as Elder Brown in the same class as Drunkards. This requires explanation. There are two ways to look at the matter. As mere members of community—and so abstractedly considered—discharging such duties and obligations as the Law or the usages of Society imperatively demand, it would be an insult to place such men as you have named along with the unfortunate class to whom the other allusion was made. The one class are indust ious, steady, honest and perchance given to hospitality; the other idle, dissipated, characterless—a dishonor and a disgrace to themselves and to all connected with them. That in one way to look at the subject. But in reference to the temperance question the class of persons are absolutely more injurious than Drunkards. No man, however humble or poor, will set up for himself as an example—a Drunkard. He would spurn the idea. But he would be proud to copy such men as you named.—Their characters stand high both in and outside of the Church, and there is the danger. It is their example, their influence. I went the other day to that miserable being, Bill Grimes, that everybody now looks down upon—so besotted with drink has he become. He was comparatively sober, as sober perhaps as he ever is. I tried to impress upon him the folly of pursuing the course he was. I recalled the days when he was somebody (he was once a man of considerable means and influence) but all in vain. You could not make him believe that he was irreclaimably a drunkard. No, no. He only took his glass; in his own opinion he was only a Moderate Drinker. Now ask Brother Smudge or Elder Smith if they are Drunkards and they would indignantly (and rightly too) exclaim No. They would say they were moderate Drinkers. Then ask Bill Grimes and he will answer the same. Therefore if the class of persons you mention do not consider the class of which Grimes is a unit one of them, it is evident Bill Grimes thinks them as belonging to his class. Draw your own inference. I was saying I tried to argue with Grimes for the sake of his family, &c., but he said he was too old a bird to be caught with chaff. It was all very well to deprive a poor fellow of his glass of whiskey; when your Squires, Deacons, and Elders can take wines and brandies. Said he "there's Elder ——, I used to visit at his house, and many a "hooker" of the "genuine" we have had together. Do you think he would have so acted if it was not right?" Now Jenkins I admit that to me was a poser. I know Elder ——, and know him to be a man of worth and trust. I therefore deplore the example he sets. It is the example. I don't argue that there is any harm in taking a glass of liquor per se. Some may—but I don't. It is the influence of those who take it upon community—Some who drink may be able to control themselves; but it will be admitted that there are many who cannot. It is therefore for the sake of the many that I would wish the some to make a little self-sacrifice. St. Paul tells us all things that may be lawful may not always be expedient. It is the ground of Expediency upon which I base the cause of temperance. It is expedient for the well being, the happiness, the prosperity of our land and its inhabitants that it should be encouraged. This is so even in a worldly point of view. But to the Christian there is additional reason for supporting the temperance cause. It is that which St. Paul states when he says: 'It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." But Jenkins let us come home to ourselves. How do we act? For instance Jenkins what are your views and practice?"

Just at this point Jenkins started up exclaiming:

"My dear sir, excuse me for trespassing so long on your time. I have an engagement."

As Jenkins passed out I shouted:

"Jenkins, are you a practical Teetotaller?"—I could hear no answer.

Jenkins didn't hear; at least the question was no answer. I had my doubts on that point. I thought his mouth slightly distorted, might easily excuse himself on that plea. I may have been mistaken; it might have been the gentleman from the "grocery fixings" on his way home between his customer's cellar—to guard a ray of No. 6, before coming out; but I have my opinions.

The Defence of Canada.

The Canadian Parliament and people have refused a contemporary vehicle to exercise a weighty influence upon the future relations of the colony to the mother country. the subject of it is the part which each respectively shall take in defence of the soil from possible invasion. The facts out of which it has arisen are briefly as follow:—Almost immediately upon the breaking out of the civil war in the United States her Majesty's Ministers, on the ground of the weak and ineffective condition into which the garrisons and places in Canada had, during a long peace, been suffered gradually to subside, deemed it necessary to dispatch thither 3000 men as a precautionary measure against any sudden inroads which lawless bands of borderers might be tempted to make. A few months afterwards the Trent difficulty having rendered a rupture between Great Britain and the United States a matter of high probability, 10,000 more men were hurried into the colony that they might constitute the nucleus of a colonial force adequate to meet the danger with which Canada appeared to be threatened. With the awful contingency of immediate war with the States full in their view, the Canadians displayed an unwavering and fervent loyalty. The proximate peril, happily, passed away; the dark cloud dispersed; but the feeling left behind it, at least in the minds of the responsible rulers on both sides of the Atlantic, was one of insecurity. Accordingly, the Canadian Ministers, prompted, it may be fairly supposed, by urgent representations from the British Government, presented to the provincial Parliament a bill making provision for the training and embodying of 50,000 militia and for organising a reserve of 50,000 more. This measure the Canadian Parliament unceremoniously rejected. As the Ministry who had presented it were exceedingly unpopular, and had previously earned for themselves an unenviable reputation for profligate jobbing, it was generally believed that the blow was really aimed at them, and that under other auspices Canada would readily do all that was reasonable in her own defence. The new Administration, however, have contented themselves with adding to the 5000 militia already in existence 5000 more, the whole, instead of being subject to an annual drill of six days' duration, are in future to undergo twelve days' drilling, but at the same amount of pay as before. Provision is also made for a reserve of 5000. This seems to be all that the Canadians contemplate doing in self-defensive preparations, and the question now arises as to how far, and in what way, the mother country can accept the decision.

It is urged on behalf of England, that besides being unwilling, she is positively unable to undertake the permanent defence of the colony against aggression by the United States, and that the cost would be more than the worth of the existing connection, it is said, although constituting an unquestionable element of Imperial grandeur and highly prized for reasons of sentiment, confers upon the mother country no material advantage, whilst it entails upon her heavy expenses. She has long since surrendered everything which gave her a special commercial interest in maintaining Canada as a dependency. She has consented to wave all exclusive privileges. She appoints the Governor, it is true, as the representative of the Crown, but she exercises no other patronage whatever. Canada enjoys the utmost latitude of self-government—chooses her own Ministers, makes her own laws authorises and spends her own taxes, disposes of her own lands, is under no restriction incompatible with complete independence. Our prestige is available for her many ways, adding largely to her importance in the eyes of the world. Our capital and our credit have been placed without stint at her disposal. Our Navy protects her from all peril of foreign interference, at least so far as the Powers of Europe are concerned. Our military resources are pledged to her aid in case of war. In return she gives nothing. She contributes nothing towards the expense of the garrisons we send her, and she heavily taxes our commodities in protection of her own colonial trade and manufacture. She expresses the most enthusiastic desire to maintain her connection, as a colony, with the United Kingdom. She cherishes a singular antipathy to her republican neighbours. She even deprecates immediate independence, lest she should not be strong enough to preserve it. Under these circumstances it is contended, she may be fairly expected to make some sacrifice in her own behalf, especially in face of the imminent danger which confronts her. For the United States' army, it is argued, will be sure to seek employment at the close of the civil war. If it shall prove victorious, it will rush upon Canada in the wantonness of its strength; if otherwise, it will seek compensation and revenge in the same quarter. But against a hostile incursion from the States none but her own inhabitants can defend her. With a land frontier of two thousand miles and upwards, many parts of which are open to any army from the south, nothing but the spirit of her population can effectually shield her. Upon the first appearance of danger we did our part; but unless she will do here we might send her 50,000 men to no good purpose. Meanwhile, those whom we have sent, should war break out in the winter, would be placed in a desperate position, and would probably be speedily overwhelmed. With all these facts and contingencies in view, the Canadian Parliament declines to do more than increase her militia in the manner and to the extent we have already described.

This is one side of the case; we are bound in all fairness to look upon the other. The Canadians represent that they are as yet a poor colony, whose resources are but beginning to be developed; that nevertheless, for a mere necessity, they are already heavily burdened; and that such portion of that burden has been forced upon them by the supremacy of another power, and principally in the construction of their railways, the ultimate demands of England. They contend that our ill-considered policy in the Russian war, which left comparatively other unprofitable trade. They protest, however, that they cherish the most sincere and ardent attachment to the parent State, and are willing to make reasonable sacrifices to maintain it. But they are not so impressed with a sense of impending danger on their own account as we are for them. They are more intimately acquainted with the temper and the affairs of their powerful neighbour than we are, and, inasmuch as if they are invaded, their homesteads will suffer, and their own lives be imperilled, they think they are unlikely to form a sound estimate of what their position requires as we are. They argue that, the exhaustation being rapidly brought about by civil war, and the almost certain division of the Union into two republics jealously jealous of each other, rather tend to guarantee their safety than to increase their exposure to invasion. At any rate, the risk is no greater than it always has been, or, if it be, it has not been augmented by any misconduct of theirs, nor by any ill-will which the federalists bear to Canada, but solely by the keen hatred which they nourish towards England. The terrible contingency against which they are called upon to make provision is due exclusively, they say, to their connection with the United Kingdom. Were that at an end, the Americans would have no motive for molesting them. And if, after all, the army which withdraws from the civil contest should precipitate itself upon Canada, 50,000 militia will not be able to resist them, even though aided by large reinforcements from this country. Looking at all these circumstances, they demur to the wisdom and policy of taking upon themselves a burden too heavy for their strength in order to provide against a speculative danger. They prefer to make other arrangements of a prospectively defensive character, better suited, they aver, to their capabilities and habits. They are doing their utmost to develop a volunteer movement, which they regard as at once cheap and effective; but, in the event of war, no small part of their reliance must be placed upon the power of the mother country.

Having looked attentively at both sides of the case, and closely compared them, we find the reflection forced upon us that a relationship which gives being to such opposite interests and duties can hardly be regarded as sound and natural. If the Canadians strongly desire, as they give abundant proof that they do, a continuance of their connection with us, but are unwilling to make any sacrifice to maintain it, the moral influence exerted upon them by their dependent position cannot be very elevating. The tree must be judged of by its fruits, and, judged of by them, it would appear that our colonial system, in the present instance at least, has not tended to produce a high order of national character. Entire disregard of what is due to others, readiness to shift their responsibilities from their own shoulders with or without reason, an unblushing spirit of self-seeking, a ridiculous estimate of their importance to England, and a disposition to regard it as entailing them to expect whatever may best suit their convience, are qualities which do anything but set off the value of colonial dependance. By doing much more for Canada than her need required we have corrupted her public spirit, encouraged her in forming a low standard of duty, and misled her into an entirely false view of her position and its demands. Far better had it been for her, as well as for ourselves, if, when we gave her perfect political freedom, we had devolved upon her the obligation of maintaining her own defensive armaments. There is no reason why the hard earnings of British industry should be taxed to relieve Canadians of responsibility in a matter affecting their own security, more especially when the fiscal injustice done to our population tends only to deteriorate the character and habits of the very people on whose behalf it is perpetrated. If the connection, therefore, is to be prolonged—for, in the nature of things it cannot be perpetuated—reason would seem to require that we should accustom the Canadians to perform the duties, as well as enjoy the advantages, of freedom and self-government. We shall best train up the colony for a dignified independence by teaching it to rely exclusively upon its own resources.

The wisest and the very worst course we can pursue, however, is that of bullying our dependency into an ill-temper. Young nations can no more be chidden into self-reliance than young people can be scolded into manliness. It must be the result of suitable training; it cannot be educed by angry and scornful words. For much that we have to deplore in our colonies we have our own system to blame—a fact which has been lucidly demonstrated by Professor Goldwin Smith. But, seeing that separation and independence must come eventually, ought not to be too long deferred, and may come earlier than we anticipate, we have a double duty to perform. We are bound to take care that our arrangements do not obstruct manly national growth in Canada, and, on the other hand, it is imperatively required of us, at least if we consult our own interest, so to use our present relationship as that the separation, when it is brought about, shall be effected in the most friendly spirit on both sides. Foolish belligerence and contemptuous abnegation are equally baneful.—London News.

WHAT MADE HOPE CAN DO.—Some months ago, the British iron Steamship Karnack was wrecked on a coral reef near the Bahamas, and became a total loss. An eastern paper says that after lying on the bottom of the sea for some months, inhabited by fish and turtles, two enterprising young men from Bath, Me. Messrs. Lambell and Arnold—bought the wreck for $225, thinking they could fish up that amount of old iron from her. John Bull protested the $225, and thought Jonathan greenest than the sea weed for making such a purchase. The purchasers explored her with submarine armor, plunged up her holes, pumped her out, raised her to the surface took her into Nassau, Mail Providence, the nearest port, hove tugged her with sails, as a barque; at an expense of $4,000 more, and took also all the loot in the vessel, which after parting with a new boiler, they sold for $75,000 in gold, and will by which $75,000 in $100,000 at least.—Bath Advertiser.

Brunel's Mishaps.

Although Brunel died at the comparatively early age of fifty-three, it is even matter of surprise that he lived so long. He had more perilous escapes from violent death than fall to the lot of most men. We have seen that at the outset of his career, when acting as assistant-engineer to his father in the Thames Tunnel, he had two narrow escapes from drowning by the river suddenly bursting in upon the works. Some time after, when inspecting the shafts of the railway tunnel under Box Hill, he was one day riding a shaggy pony at a rapid pace down the hill when the animal stumbled and fell, pitching the engineer on his head with great violence; he was taken up for dead but eventually recovered. When the Great Western line was finished and at work he used frequently to ride upon the engine with the driver, and occasionally he drove it himself. One day, when passing through the Box Tunnel upon the engine at considerable speed Brunel thought he discerned between him and the light some object standing on the same line of road along which his engine was travelling. He instantly turned on the full steam and dashed at the object, which was driven into a thousand pieces. It afterwards turned out to be a contractor's truck which had broken loose from a ballast-train on its way through the tunnel. Another narrow escape which he had was on board the Great Western steam-ship, where he fell down a hatchway into the hold, and was nearly killed. But the most extraordinary accident which befel him was that which occurred while one day playing with his children. Like his father Sir Marc, he was fond of astonishing them with slight-of-hand tricks, in which he displayed considerable dexterity; and the feat which he proposed to them on this occasion was the passage of a half-sovereign through his mouth out at his ear. Unfortunately, he swallowed the coin, which dropped into his windpipe. The accident occurred on the 3d of April, 1833, and it was followed by frequent fits of coughing, and occasional uneasiness in the right side of the chest; but so slight was the disturbance of breathing, that it was for some time doubted whether the coin had really fallen into the windpipe. After the lapse of fifteen days, Sir B. Brodie met Mr Key in consultation, and they concurred in the opinion that most probably the half-sovereign was lodged at the bottom of the right bronchus. The day after, Mr Brunel placed himself in a prone position on his face upon some chairs, and bending his head and neck downwards, he distinctly felt the coin drop towards the glottis. A violent cough ensued, and on resuming the erect posture he felt as if the object again moved downwards into the chest. Here was an engendering difficulty, the like of which Mr Brunel had never before encountered. The mischief was purely mechanical; a foreign body had got into his breathing apparatus, and must be removed, if at all, by some mechanical expedient. Mr Brunel was, however, equal to the occasion. He had an apparatus constructed, consisting of a platform which moved upon a hinge in the centre. Upon this he had himself strapped, and his body was then inverted in order that the coin might drop downward by its own weight, and so be expelled. At the first experiment the coin again slipped towards the glottis, but it caused such an alarming fit of convulsive coughing and appearance of choking that danger was apprehended, and the experiment was discontinued. Two days after, on the 25th, the operation of tracheotomy was performed by Sir Benjamin Brodie, assisted by Mr Key, with his intention of extracting the coin by the forceps, if possible. The attempts to do so were made without success. The introduction of the forceps into the windpipe on the second occasion was attended with so excessive a degree of irritation that it was felt the experiment could not be continued without immense danger to life. The incision in the windpipe was, however kept open, by means of a quill or tube, until the 13th of May, by which time Mr Brunel's strength had sufficiently recovered to enable the original experiment to be repeated. He was again strapped to his apparatus; his body was inverted; his back was struck gently, and he distinctly felt the coin quit its place on the right side of the chest. The opening in the windpipe allowed him to breathe while the throat was stopped by the coin, and it thus had the effect of preventing the spasmodic action of the glottis. After a few coughs the coin dropped into his mouth. Mr Brunel used afterwards to say that the moment the coin dropped against his upper front teeth was, perhaps, the most exquisite in his whole life. The half-sovereign had been in his windpipe for not less than six weeks.—"The Brunels," in the Quarterly Review.

The Best Bed.

Of the eight pounds which a man eats and drinks in a day it is thought that not less than five pounds leaves his body through the skin; and of these five pounds a considerable per centage escapes during the night while he is in bed. The larger part of this is water; but in addition there is much effete and poisonous matter. This being in great part gaseous in form, permeates every part of the bed. Thus all parts of the bed, mattress, blankets, as well as sheets, soon become foul and need purification. The mattress needs this renovation quite as much as the sheets.

To allow the sheets to be used without washing or changing three or six months, would be regarded as bad housekeeping; but I insist, if a thin sheet can absorb enough of the poisonous excretions of the body to make it unfit for use in a few days, a thick mattress which can absorb and retain a thousand times as much of these poisonous excretions, needs to be purified as often certainly as once in three months.

A sheet can be washed; a mattress cannot be renovated in this way. Indeed, there is, no other way of cleansing a mattress but by steaming it, or picking it to pieces, and then it is fragments exposing it to the direct rays of the sun. As these processes are scarcely practicable with any of the ordinary mattresses, I am decidedly of the opinion that the good old fashioned straw bed, which was every three months be changed for fresh straw, and the ticks be washed, is the sweetest and healthiest of beds.

If in the winter season, the pressure of the straw bed makes it a little uncomfortable, spread over it a comforter, or woolen blankets, which should be washed as often as every two weeks. With this arrangement, if you wash all the bed covering as often as once in two or three weeks, you will have a delightful and healthy bed.

Now, if you have the bed in air, with open windows during the day and not make it up for the night before evening, you will have added greatly to the enjoyment of your rest and remuneration to the tone of your health.—Dr. S. Lewis.

THE VACANT SPEAKERSHIP.

The substantial favors which our cotemporary, the Review and his family, received from the late government, have, for a long, time exercised upon his moral vision the invariable result of obscuring his sense of right and wrong.

No matter how flagrant the extravagance or mismanagement of the members of that government, the Review could only see them earning immortal honor to themselves, and securing the gratitude of an admiring posterity.

We often abstain from any notice of the palpable party-coloring given by the Review, for two reasons: one is, that we especially dislike wrangling; another is, that we believe few in this County place much reliance upon a paper which, by grasping at all the patronage it could secure from the men lately in power, rendered itself incapable of dealing faithfully or impartially with their acts and characters.

By its own practice it advocated the American doctrine, that, "To the victors belong the spoils."

We are led into these remarks by the notice in the Review relative to the fitness of the Honorable Mr. Smith for the Speakership of the Legislative Council, and that such an office would only be a "fair reward for his long career of usefulness."

Although called upon, as public journalists, to animadvert upon the conduct of public men, we desire to deal fairly towards even our opponents.

We give Mr. Smith credit for much energy of character, and for special fitness as an electioneering canvasser, but we feel bound to express our disagreement with the Review's estimate of his character and his claims.

Any one presiding over, and in a measure controlling the proceedings of a deliberative body like the Legislative Council, should elicit the respect and confidence even of his opponents by soberness and dignity of action, as well as by the solidity of his judgment—we cannot forget Mr. Smith's exhibition on the Court House Hall last year, and it is well known that regrets were felt and expressed at Mr. Vankoughnet's retirement from the leadership in the Legislative Council, in which he was succeeded by Mr. Smith.

We have, however, more to do with his claims for "reward, for a long career of usefulness,"—his fitness Speaker will be determined by the Council themselves.

Mr. Smith claims credit for his administration of the Post Office. It is very difficult for us, at a distance from the seat of government, to determine what measure of credit is due to the head and what to the subordinates of a public department. It is well known that the Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Griffin, is a very able and laborious gentleman, whilst we have reason to believe that Mr. Smith was not remarkable for his assiduity as a departmental chief.

But admitting that his duties were fairly and faithfully performed, was there no corresponding remuneration, in the higher social position? the control of no inconsiderable patronage, in addition to the income of five thousand dollars a year? and one or two agreeable trips to England and the Continent of Europe at the public expense? To every "miserable miscompoop pitchforked" into the government of the Province, (we apologize to our readers for using the Review's elegant language) to expect after three or four years tenure of office forever to fatten upon the public purse,? This has, unfortunately been too often the case, and the Review advocates such a course, a course that must inevitably make the highest estimate of the "duty of statesmanship to consist in the attainment, at any price, of office for themselves and their friends." We entirely dissent from such doctrine, whether it has reference to members of Parliament or editors of newspapers. We deem de rigueur to the opposition that becomes a man has for three or four years even well performed duties for which he has been well remunerated, that therefore he can lay claim to a "reward for a long career of usefulness as a public man." A man must have given some more decided proofs of abnegation of self, and more continuous devotion to the public interests before he can claim further reward at their hands. But are there no men in Mr. Smith's public career that would contradict the effect of a far more useful and valuable character than he can lay claim to? THE WAR.

The latter part of last week some very exciting [illegible] reached town. It was to the effect that the Northern army was forced to retreat, and was making its way for the Potomac pursued by the Confederates. That Stonewall Jackson was bound for an attack upon Washington, which seemed to spread consternation all over the country.

A very severe battle had been fought at Baton Rouge on the Mississippi, during which the rebels lost their iron clad vessel the Arkansas, and in consequence were repulsed with considerable loss. The Northern army seems to be concentrating, and receiving additions from the new levies.—Jefferson Davis in his message to the Confederate Congress urges a new conscription and an energetic prosecution of the war. In anguish of not positive of final success, calls for acknowledgement to heaven for the success hitherto vouchsafed to the new government and republic, and is confident that the smiles of heaven will be upon them still in their glorious struggle for independence. From all accounts the rebel force is considerable, and the new levy which is about being made—embracing those between 16 and 50—will increase it considerably.

It is said that according to the last census the entire white male population in the Seceded States within those ages amounts to but 800,000, and the North having more than double that number is confident of final success. Altogether this war is without a parallel in the history of nations, and posterity will look on it with astonishment. If not soon ended it will desolate both North and South, and such is the determination of both the belligerents that each seems bent upon desolating each section rather than give in. It is a fearful decision and we hope that something will transpire soon to prevent them carrying out their purpose. At present amicable settlement is more hopeless than ever.

The recent decree of President Lincoln emancipating the slaves of the Rebels will probably complicate matters, and at this late period we cannot see the benefit likely to result to the North by it. The case would have been different at the onset.

The stern arbiter of war must settle the dispute as far as they are concerned. It is consolatory to know that "the Lord reigneth over all."

THE STEAMER "CAROLINE."

There has been quite a controversy going on in the Leader as to the number of lives lost at the capture of the Caroline at Fort Schoolcssor in December, 1837. The controversy arose from a notice in the Leader of some of the events in the life of the late Sir Allan McNab, wherein it was stated that some five or six persons were killed at the capture. This statement elicited a letter from Cobourg in which the writer states that but one person was killed in the encounter—a coloured man named Durfee. Mr. Robert Armour comes out with a letter over his own signature stating that he was present, and corroborating the statement of the Cobourg writer that only one man was killed. And last but not least we have our friend and townsman, Mr. B. D. Rogers, in a letter to the Leader giving a particular account of the capture and disposal of the vessel. He states that he was among the first and last on board of the vessel, that there were a few shots fired and a short scuffle, but is positive that not a soul, dead or alive, was on board of her save the capturing party after she was unmoored.

Mr. Rogers searched the vessel with a lamp, and he considers the horrid stories of the butcheries on board of the Caroline, by the capturing party, the result of lively imaginations of certain individuals he can name, quickened by grog.

We remember distinctly the account passing current at the time of the capture. The captors ordered every one ashore—some skirmishing took place, one or two were known to have been killed, and that the capturing party took special pains to see that there was no one left on board, when they towed her out and set fire to her. The Leader derives its information chiefly from documentary evidence, and we incline to the belief that its statement as to the number of lives lost is the most correct.—Mr. Rogers does not dispute nor in fact does he refer to the number of lives lost in the skirmish—he states that he heard shots fired, and we think he establishes successfully the fact that no person, dead or alive, was in the vessel when she was fired and sent over the falls.

Mr. R. was too busy to notice what others did, or did not. We know that a better hand for such an emergency is not to be found in Canada. We have often witnessed his daring, coolness and energy at fires, and while others are thinking he is working. He is a man of deeds not of words, and we believe him when he says he was one of the very first on board and last off—a braver man than B. D. Rogers there does not exist, and his narrative of the exciting and memorable affair of the 29th Dec., 1837, is we believe thoroughly reliable. A brave man seems to be guilty of a mean or cruel act, hence his anxiety to see that no one was left on board.

We call the attention of our readers and the public generally to a work just about issuing from the Toronto press, "The Life and Times of William Lyon McKenzie," by his son-in-law, Mr. Chas. Lindsay, of the Leader. We understand that the material from which the work is written is chiefly from the manuscripts of Mr. McKenzie himself, it will therefore be reliable. To the patriot desirous of acquiring a correct knowledge of the history of Canada during its most eventful and interesting period, we know of no other way to obtain [illegible] than by the book. From the [illegible] we learn that [illegible] 800 copies, [illegible] "Will be published by Mr. Robertson in Toronto, and in Montreal by Mr. Rose, and in Quebec by Mr. Hunter, and in Hamilton by Mr. Bell, while, [illegible] Mr. S. M. Wait is the agent for Peterborough and Victoria, Le is now in Town, and will proceed in a few days to the Townships for subscriptions. We recommend our friends to subscribe for a copy, as we consider a history such as this will be, a valuable acquisition to the family library, giving as it will not only a record of one of the most important periods of Canadian history, but also the history of one of its most public and prominent men—a man, with all his faults, stands forward in a dark period as pre-eminently the peoples friend and an honest man.

A SHOCKING MURDER IN DOURO.

One of those common, but sad tragedies, emanating from the use of intoxicating liquors, has been enacted about two miles from this Town, in the Township of Douro. The particulars, as far as we have been able to gather them as elicited at the inquest, are as follows:—

On Saturday last, the 23rd inst., a Mr. Rishor had a raising near Welsh's Tavern, on the Dummer Road, at which a number of the inhabitants near by were present. A man named Alfred Range who lived in a shanty a short distance off, had, a short time ago, some of his windows broken by stones. He was at the bee, and during the day he charged a young man named Patrick Sullivan with breaking his windows. Sullivan denied the charge, and more than once attempted to beat Range for accusing him, but was prevented by others from carrying out his purpose. He was heard by some to threaten vengeance on Range, saying he would murder him. It appears that spirituous liquors were used pretty freely through the day, and Range was intoxicated when he made the charge against Sullivan—at all events, when the days work was over Range was so drunk that he could not be got along without carrying. The men in place of carrying him to a house, or to his home which was not far off, after setting him up against a pile of lumber, and propping him up, left him, thinking he would soon come to himself, and then he would get up and go home. He was found on Sunday, and although Dr. Harvey was informed of the fact the inquest was not held till Monday, when he empannelled a jury and summoned all the persons at the bee, from whom the above facts were elicited. A summons was issued for Sullivan, but he did not attend. A neighbor who was summoned, asked Sullivan if he was going? he replied, "No—let them all go to h—ll."

The verdict of the jury was, that Range had come to his death by the hands of Sullivan.

A warrant was issued on Tuesday noon for Sullivan's arrest, but up to the time of our going to press he has not been apprehended. Range when viewed by the jury presented a horrid appearance, his head and face seemed pounded to a mummy, his teeth knocked in—there were twenty cuts on his head and face, one of them on the top of his head was six inches long. Several stones and two clubs, as if made for the purpose were found lying near the body.

Another loud warning to abstain from intoxicating liquors—another victim added to the long list of unfortunates, who meet a premature death from their use. O! when will the living lay to heart the many startling lessons read to them so frequently, and refrain from tasting or touching the deadly foe.

Since writing the above our attention has been called to what appears a very serious neglect on the part of the Coroner. During the investigation when several witnesses had deposed to hearing Sullivan threaten to kill Range, the Coroner was requested by two or three persons present, to issue his warrant for apprehending Sullivan who was then within about three miles from where the inquest was held. This was about four o'clock p. m. on Monday. The verdict was given in at out 7 p. m., but the warrant was not put in the constables hands till soon on Tuesday—an unaccountable remissness we think on the part of the Coroner, calling for explanation.

Sullivan is now nowhere to be found, and the ends of justice seem to be frustrated for want of prompt action on the part of Coroner Harvey.

We have been requested to publish the following for the information of the members of the Peterborough Choral Society:—

The Committee of the Peterborough Choral Society met in Mr. Whites' store on Thursday evening, 21st inst., Mr. Hill in the Chair.

It was moved by Mr. W. N. Kennedy, seconded by Mr. Joseph Butler,—That in consequence of Mr. Brown's withdrawal from the Society, and the removal of the piano from the School Room, the weekly meetings be discontinued until further notice.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Joseph Butler, seconded by Mr. J. I. Davidson,—That Mr. E. C. Hill be requested to collect the books and other property belonging to the Society, and to take charge of the same, subject to the order of the Committee.

The Secretary then presented his report from which it appeared that the Society had discharged all its liabilities.

The Committee would desire to congratulate the members on the financial position of the Society, and express their regret at the discontinuance of the weekly meetings for the present.

The Committee have also to request that all members having books belonging to the Society will have the kindness to leave them as soon as possible with the Secretary.

It was then resolved that the above resolutions be published in the local papers.

J. I. DAVIDSON,
Secretary.

Our friend THOMPSON, will please accept our thanks for the presentation of one of his Photographic views of the new Telegraph line being erected in Peterborough. All the camp fixtures and cooking utensils with the men appear so well; indeed it is one of the best we have ever seen, we would advise every one to call at his rooms and see them.

REMEMBER that the examination of the Deaf and Dumb comes off on Friday evening next, at 8 o'clock, in the Lecture Room of the Union School.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

LETTER No. 9.

BELFAST—(IRELAND.)

The approach to Belfast, by the river Lurgan, from the sea is a romantic one.—In the view in a castle said to have been built in the 10th century, and which has been the scene of many sanguinary feuds between the Saxon lords and the old Celtic chiefs.

Belfast is the great emporium of the North of Ireland, and is possessed of a naturally safe and sheltered harbour; a large trade is carried on with London, Liverpool, and the ports of Scotland, and we understand it has been selected as a port for the East India Company's ships. In population and general importance the city has increased at a surprisingly rapid rate when compared with the growth of other places in Europe. From an old document we see that in the year 1660 the Town was partly enclosed by a wall, and contained only five rows of houses, and had a population of about 500; at the present time the population numbers 60,000, and the corporation extends over about two and a-half square miles. Most of the houses and public buildings are of brick, and are therefore in appearance behind those of most other cities in this country. The streets are open and clean and present a cheerful appearance.

The bridge of Belfast is remarkable for its length, which is 2,552 feet. The number of arches is 21, all of which are of hewn free-stone.

A noticeable thing, and one peculiar to this place, is the boards which hang on the walls and railings along the streets, fixed there with chain and padlock, with verses of Scripture painted thereon. These are placed there by permission of the authorities, and to take down or disfigure one of them is an offence punishable by imprisonment.

There is an act of kindness extended to strangers in this city which shows the generosity and hospitality of its inhabitants.—The city Library and News-room is open, free to all travellers for eight days, and every kindness is shown them at the Institution.

CARRICK FERGUS.

A few hours journey along the shore and we reach the ancient town of Carrick-Fergus, deriving its name from a Scottish Prince, Fergus, said to have been wrecked off this place before the beginning of the Christian era.

The beautiful bay is said to have been where the pirate, Paul Jones, engaged and sunk the English man-of-war Drake.

There is a striking circumstance in the history of this town. In the 16th century a privilege was enjoyed by the Corporation of importing goods at one-fourth of the duty payable at other Irish ports. This greatly irritated against the prosperity of Belfast, and the inhabitants of that place with a shrewd foresight saw the necessity of, if possible, purchasing this peculiar advantage, which was effected through the Crown, for a large sum of money. "From this period," says one writer, "the origin of Belfast as a Commercial mart may be dated, and to this one stroke of policy may be attributed the decay of the one town and the great prosperity of the other."

The fisheries of the Bay and the manufacture of linen are the principal means of sustenance to the inhabitants. The soil near the sea-shore contains some valuable earths, such as pipe-clay, potter's earth, trass, white limestone, gypsum, &c.

LOUGH-MORNE.

Leaving Carrick-Fergus an uncultivated track is passed, and on the left lies the elevated lake of Lough-Morne, which lies about 500 feet above the level of the sea. It is about one mile in diameter, and is supplied from internal sources.

The name Lough-morne, we have read, is a corruption of Lough-more, the Great Lake, and a fabulous legend is preserved among the peasantry respecting it, which runs somewhat as follows:—

"This place was once a large "town, when one day an aged mendicant came to seek for lodging, "which being refused, he exclaimed 'although it is now a town, yet shall it "be a lough-ew-morn.' Immediately he left the town and withdrew to an adjacent "hill, upon which the ground began to sink, "eels are said to have risen above the heather, stones, and ultimately the whole "town sunk into an abyss, and the water "rolled over it, from which time," says the legend "it has been called Lough-morne."

Passing many objects of interest, which we cannot find space to note, we retrace our steps to Belfast, and there take the Ulster and Southern R. R. to Dublin.

This line offers unusual attractions to tourists. The Hill of Howth is to be seen, affording also a good view of the bold and rugged scenery of the cliffs around.

The Viaduct over the River Boyne is a stupendous structure, and (leaving the Grand Trunk R. R. bridge at Montreal, C. E., out of the question) is one of the most remarkable structures ever erected for Railway purposes. The part of the River seen from the Bridge is noted as less for the grandeur of its banks than for the historical associations connected with the site of the Battle of the Boyne, King William's Glen, King James Second's encampment, &c., &c.

The River is navigable for large ships from the sea up to Drogheda, where the great Viaduct is. On the way from Drogheda to Dublin fine views are to be had of the sea-coast scenery of Ireland: the Round Tower of Swords, the ruins of Baldungan Castle, the Round Tower of Lusk, Malahide Castle, &c.

From your correspondent,
R——.

—The Toronto papers say the Northern Railway Company are now running trains night and day, in order to clear the line of way-freight before the fall trade in produce commences. The business of road is immense, and keeps increasing.

—The morals of the army of Virginia, under General Pope, are decidedly bad. The New York Times says that the men are inveterate thieves, particularly of horses. The World says of them:—"Another evil exists to a great extent in the army of Virginia. I allude to the practice of procuring (through itinerant traders and only traders) every denomination of spurious paper and broken bank notes, as well as fac simile notes of the confederacy, and passing them indiscriminately upon the unsuspecting inhabitants, poor as well as rich, old and young, male and female. Your correspondent is cognizant of several instances where this has been perpetrated in camp, for just sparing by poor aged women. Unless this system is checked, will not the whole country be overrun by hordes of swindlers on the close of the war?"

Communications.

For the Examiner.

SIR,—Whatever objections there may be towards the institution of Orangeism, they appear at first sight well founded, but after consideration they are all outweighed in the balance of sound judgment. Since there appears to be in general misconception abroad among the Brethren that it is almost an impossibility to err in their conduct towards their Roman Catholic friends, though in these days there is less in the character of the order who openly and wantonly insult the people of the Roman faith.

It is not now, nor was it ever, the intention of the order to trample upon the rights and privileges of that Church and people, though it seems to differ from that of the creed which is supported by us. Yet our constitution condemns any conduct which will maliciously slur the same, and it ignores the noble principles of our order to do so. We look back only for a few years and see the marked change since then, how often were slang expressions thrown in the face of those whom we knew it would insult, and which was the cause of so many broils and disturbances in those days between us as different parties. But now we thank our stars that such mean characters are being quickly disposed of and cast out from under the shelter which our noble standard affords. We don't for a moment presume to believe that we have a right in the slightest shade to trample, abuse, or insult those who seem to differ from us in religion. But we rather ought to be charitable towards them, and show them the principles of the order to which we belong, that our love and respect extends beyond the borders of our institution and enters the ranks of those who in many despise. In strong evidence of the principles of reform among us it is now seen what change there is in our celebrations, peace and harmony prevail and a spirit of toleration exists within us which seldom appeared among us before, and why? Simply because those slang expressions, offensive to the ears of others not within our pale, have died away, those brandy revellings have come to a close, those pernicious habits are being driven far in the back ground and sinking in the sea of oblivion, and would to God appear no more among us forever.

However there are various reasons assigned for all these improvements, and a few of them are as follows: The Lodge room is no more a place of revelry and drinking; bad habits within its walls are altogether gone, their monies are being put to better advantage, and a greater reverence paid to the "good old flag" and constitution. A spirit of working enterprise has entered their halls, hence the change for the better, thus their eyes are being opened to see the folly of their past days, and long may they remain buried in the mire of ignorance. In almost every district in the Province new, commodious and handsome halls are being finished to receive their inmates, and surely their enterprising spirit will not rest here, for to finish the places and make them comfortable and places of intelligence and entertainment something must be done in the way of fitting up a fine collection of books for the use of its members. And as we feel confident that all the intelligent community will laud such a project in our midst, and no longer will it have to be said that the orange body are nothing more than a pack of rowdies—which we well know has often been said, and we cannot blame our friends for this for often we hear the expression from the lips of those who pretend to be sound protestants. And who can deny but that there has been actions which have told the public that there was something wrong among us. And when we look at some transactions between some of the brotherhood we find in many instances that shave! shave! shave! is their only motto, this is almost every where to be found among us instead of acting with an eye single to the honor of the institution. This ought not to be, for our constitution forbids it, honesty forbids it, and our Bible forbids it. And yet parties who are guilty of such practices are admitted to our circle—and in so doing violate our noble principles.

It for a moment we glance at the qualifications essential to become a member, we will find that all who keep it strictly will be respected not only as orangemen but as citizens too, and as we fear that too few of us ponder over such qualifications too seldom, it would be better for us to think more on the matter, for we know that a person who desires to become one with us "He should have a sincere love and veneration for his Almighty Maker, productive of those lively and happy fruits, "righteousness and obedience to His commands; a firm and steadfast faith in the "Saviour of the world, convinced that he "is the only mediator between a sinful creature and an offended Creator. His disposition should be humane and compassionate, and his behaviour kind and conciliatory; he should be an enemy to "savage brutality and every species of "unchristian conduct; a lover of rational "and improving society; faithfully regarding the Protestant Religion, and sincerely "desirous to propogate its precepts (i. e.) "charity and good will to all men. Zealous in promoting the honor, happiness and "prosperity of his Queen and country; "heartily desirous of success in those pursuits, yet convinced that God alone can "grant them. He should have an hatred to cursing and swearing, and of taking the "name of God in vain; he should use all "opportunities of discouraging them "among his Brethren, and shun the "society of all persons addicted to those "shameful practices. Prudence should "guide all his actions; temperance, sobriety "and honesty direct his conduct; and the "laudable objects of the association be his "motives and endeavours.

Thus we see in ourselves that too few of us have that degree of love and veneration for our Almighty Creator as we should have, too few of us indeed ponder over our responsibilities enough, and too few of us remember the sacredness of our obligations. Were this not so far better would we be to ourselves, and make better citizens too.—How is it we see so many of us treat the brute creation with such violence and so much inhumanity—this too in contrary to the principles of our order. And where is the possibility of the smallest particle of humanity whose disposition has been allowed to ignoble himself with brutal conduct towards the poor dumb animals, his principle are a shade less than "the small end of nothing whittled into a point." Again, what a change would there be in our neighborhoods if there were a spirit of cultivating reformatory principles on this point too, but confident are we that just so soon as thorough and universal knowledge enters our halls those abuses referred to will pass away as "mist in the morning sun."

What comfort and happiness would be found among us were we all resolved to be better than we really are, not only civilly but religiously too. 'Soon thousands of our respectable fellow men would enter our ranks who as yet stand aloof from us. Though it is true our constitution hardly affords that man of wealth, without principle and honor, cannot enter beneath her shadow, and has not the required qualifications observed.

The richest in our land may desire admittance and be refused forever. Yet there have been "Wolves in Sheep's clothing," who have gained an entrance because that prompt strictness to the order has not been attended to in proper time, for we know that many seeming politicians have attained a position and place with us, who have never yet deserved it. And why? Because they acted the part of a traitor, and we all know it too well. But proud are we of Brethren who have acted well and still act well for us, both publicly and privately, and our order rejoices in being confident of the same, and we hope brethren to see the day when many thousands more will be added to the tens of thousands of faithful, loyal hearts, and every aspiration be for the success and welfare of our glorious order and pray for the Queen's royal domains and ever say for "God save the Queen."

Cricket.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—Two return matches between the Peterboro' and Lindsay Cricket Clubs have played on the grounds of the latter, on Tuesday, 19th inst., when Peterboro' came off victorious, beating their opponents in one innings, and having 33 runs to spare. It was one of the most decided victories that has ever occurred in this part of the Province, and speaks well for Peterboro', as their eleven was particularly composed of boys taken from the second eleven.

After a journey through the townships of Emily and Ops, we arrived in Lindsay at 8 o'clock, and put up at that comfortable hotel kept by Mr. Lindsay. Having satisfied our appetites by a good breakfast, (for I can assure you, Mr. Editor, that a drive of 30 miles in the morning air is better than a dose of Stoughton Bitters for improving the digestion), we proceeded to the Cricket grounds, and on our way could not but with pleasure notice the rapid improvement that has taken place since the late very disastrous fire, which almost destroyed the Town. Where the ruins were now stands handsome brick building, and there are others being erected which give the place a lively and business like appearance, and speaks well for the enterprise and perseverance of its inhabitants. Arriving at the cricket ground play commenced, the toss was won by Lindsay who sent their opponents to the wickets, Wrighton and Loucks going in to the bowling of Weller and Grace, the former gentlemen well sustained their reputation by keeping their wickets for fully an hour against the sharp bowling of Weller. Loucks was then caught by Smith; Kennedy succeeded him, and made good play, adding twelve to the score. Wrighton, meanwhile, was unfortunately run out. Bradbeer, a fine batter followed, but was soon bowled out by one of Weller's rippers. Strickland then went in and succeeded in fully accomplishing his average; Higginson followed him and added largely to the score, which he did in good style, but was run out rather sharp; Mitchell came next and was soon disposed of; McDougall then added nine to the score. When the last wicket fell the result was 152 runs for Peterboro'.

Lindsay now took the bat to the bowling of Bradbeer and Kennedy; after a very short innings they went out for thirty runs. The bowling of Bradbeer was the admiration of all, so well did he succeed that only six runs were made off him, for which he took eight wickets. According to the rules of Cricket our opponents had to follow their first innings, which they did with the expectation of making up for their bad luck, but their success was not much better, forty-two runs being the result. Bradbeer's slows and Kennedy's steady bowling was too much for them. The fielding of the boys on the Peterboro' side was good, and particularly that of Irwin, who played point.

At 7 o'clock we sat down to a sumptuous dinner provided by our landlord, Mr. Lindsay, Mr. Hopkins, President of the Lindsay Club, presided over it. After we had fully satisfied the inner man the health of the Queen was proposed by Mr. Hopkins, who did so with a few very appropriate remarks. It was responded to with that enthusiasm and loyalty which you will always find amongst Cricketers. Many other toasts and songs followed, when at half-past nine we parted company with our friends in that good feeling and friendship which characterizes the Cricketer. I cannot dwell too long on the kind manner in which we were received and treated, and the trouble taken to entertain us. The President has our well wishes, and may we often meet him in the position which he now holds. The following is the score:—

THE RAT HOLE FLEET.—The Yankees have sunk some 20 vessels loaded with stone at the mouth of Charleston Harbour, which will doubtless prevent any vessels drawing over a few feet of water, entering that port for all time to come, this must prove a serious loss to the property owners there, but it will not at all interfere with the exploits of the "Camden Pile Destroyer" for the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, toothache, and all complaints of that nature. Sold by all Medicine Dealers everywhere, price 25 cts per bottle.

A COUPLE OF FIGHTING GIRLS.—Yesterday the provost-marshal had before him two soldiers in uniform, of a light form, who excited his suspicions. After being questioned they admitted that they were females and had been serving as privates in a regiment now in Pope's army for many months. They were furnished with proper apparel and sent northward.—N. Y. Commercial Verily, our American friends are getting along a little too fast. They ought to know that stealing is stealing in Canada, and liable to punishment.

THE LONDON DAILY FREE PRESS:—We are pleased to observe that the Daily Free Press, London, C. W. has resolved on and after to-morrow, to enlarge its size to a thirty-two columns paper. Arrival of the Hibernian.

Cape Race Aug. 23.

The steamship Hibernian, from Liverpool 14th via Londonderry 15th, passed this point early this a. m.

It is generally believed that the 15th of August is fixed for a demonstration throughout Italy against Francis II.

Bombay dates of July 24th, report an intense excitement in the Cotton market, with an advance in some instances of 50 per cent.

There is great excitement also in the Calcutta market.

ENGLAND.

The Federal gunboat Tuscarora suddenly left Kingstown at half-past one o'clock on the 13th. It was reported that the cause of her leaving was an intimation from the Collector of Customs that she was required to leave the harbour without delay. Her destination was unknown.

A conference on the subject of the cotton supply had taken place in London.

A deputation from the Cotton Supply Association had met the Commissioners from the countries which sent cotton samples to the International Exhibition. Representatives from Italy, Portugal, Spain, India, Australia and sundry South American States were present. All made more or less encouraging representations of what these countries were capable of producing.

The London Daily News has an editorial on the rapid suppression of the secessionists scheme in the prosecution of the American war. It says it was not to be expected that the Northern people would see at the outset that the extinction of slavery was their true aim, and only practicable issue to put an end to the war.

The extinction of slavery is now undoubtedly becoming the master element of the struggle. The crisis is passing; every moment makes new abolitionists, and when there are enough of them to satisfy President Lincoln he will speak the word and make the sign which will save the republic.

At a meeting of the British North American Association in London, a resolution was passed, highly approving of the Colonial policy of the Newcastle.

FRANCE.

Gen. Concha, the new Spanish Embassador to Paris, has presented his credentials to the Emperor. He expressed the desire of Spain to maintain friendly relations with France, but regards no alliance as likely.

The Marquis Lagoni had arrived at Paris from Turin. It was believed that his mission was to submit to the Emperor a plan for the occupation of Rome by a mixed garrison of French and Italian troops.

The Moniteur of the 14th publishes an account of Gen. Concha's reception by the Emperor.

The Emperor said I have neglected no opportunity of testifying my lively sympathy for Her Majesty the Queen of Spain as well as my profound esteem for the Spanish nation. I have been surprised, as well as grieved at the divergence of opinion which has arisen between the two Governments. It rests with the Queen alone to find me always a sincere ally, and the Spanish people a loyal friend who desires their greatness and prosperity.

ITALY.

It is believed at Palermo that Garibaldi still intends to embark at Messina.

The moderate journals of Italy condemn the proceedings of Garibaldi.

The correspondent of the London Times from Rome of the 16th, says there is still unfavourable intelligence from all parts between the South and the government authorities find the greatest difficulty in protecting a landing on the Sardinian coast.

John Tadell on Slavery.

A member of the Foreign Legations in Washington just arrived from Europe, relates of this distinguished rebel a story which is now widely circulated in this city.

One of his cousins, who holds an office in the Department of the Interior, in France, having been invited to one of Slidell's soirees, availed himself of the opportunity—first, to see how a Southern rebel looked; second, to know his opinion about slavery. As it may well be imagined, the French official was the object of the most delicate attention on the part of Mrs. Slidell and her husband, who strove to persuade him of the holiness of the Southern cause, and to make him believe in its ultimate success. After having exhausted all their arguments, the Frenchman, politely addressing Mr. Slidell, asked whether he was not of the opinion that the moral attitude of the North in this contest was an impediment to the success of the South, and if the maintenance of slavery did not delay the work of its independence. "You are perfectly right," answered Mr. Slidell, "Europe is adverse to our institutions, and we know it. But please mark; they have not been inaugurated or created, but inherited by us. However., whenever the day marked for the sacrifice of our social privileges will come, the slave-owners in the South will do, I have no doubt, what your ancestors did nearly an age ago, in the National Assembly of France. They will sacrifice them as a necessary offering to their country's peace and welfare. But now this sacrifice is impossible. It would look as an act of inefficiency on the part of the South to maintain its integrity, and would weaken rather than strengthen us. Be sure, however, that the time is not far distant when the institution of Slavery—cause of our present misery—will be forever removed from our statute books. The French Government can greatly assist us in this; if it acts with its proverbial prudence and sagacity, it may place us in the necessity of shortly declaring gradual emancipation at home; an act which would be as satisfactory to many of us as to the spirit of Christianity and civilization abroad."

Bloody tragedy in Missouri.

Some five years ago, Legrand Hall, of Franklin county, Missouri, was convicted of the murder of Andrew Bullock, and sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment; but was pardoned by Governor Stewart. He has lived a reckless life since that time. Learning that his father, who was on his death-bed, had made his will, bequeathing a larger amount to his brothers and sisters than to himself, he became enraged, and employed a negro, a servant of the family, to murder the whole family on the 4th of July. He disclosed the matter to Emily Hall, one of the sisters, and when the day arrived she betrayed great agitation and anxiety to leave the House. The negro ran away, however, without committing the crime. Several nights afterwards, she was sitting with Hall by the bed-side of her father, when he arose and left the house. A short time afterwards he appeared at the window and called Emily to him and immediately shot her through the head. He repaired to the house of his brother, some miles distant, and asked his help to catch some runaway negroes. The wife of his brother suspected a foul purpose and objected. Legrand was seen to have a pistol in his hand at the time. The murderer was arrested and imprisoned in the county gaol at Union. He was taken thence two days afterwards to the court-house for a preliminary examination. He had prepared his plan of defence and fortified himself by legal authorities. But he had not made provision against the form of administration which was in store. He had just arrived at the court-house when a number of citizens of Franklin county gathered around him, and took him in a waggon to the outskirts of the town with a rope around his neck. Stopping at a hickory tree, the one end was thrown over a stout limb, and Hall was soon hanging therefrom. After hanging there until animation was suspended, he was taken down, and by considerable effort was restored to consciousness. He was asked to state the facts in regard to the killing of his sister. He denied all knowledge of the transaction and his own complicity in the murder. The crowd then took him again, amid his protestations of entire innocence, and hung him by the neck until he was dead, after which the body was handed over to his family.

PASSIONS AND EMOTIONS

SUCH AS

Love, Hope, Joy, Affection, Anger, Jealousy, Grief, Fear, Despair, Avarice, Charity, Cheerfulness, Religion, etc., showing the influence of the Mind on the Body as a Cause of Health and Disease.

ALSO:

A Complete Materia Medica,

or, list of all the principal remedies used in the treatment of disease, including nearly

300 MEDICAL PLANTS, HERBS AND VEGETABLE REMEDIES,

with descriptions of each, and directions for preparing and using them. (With an elegant and correct Likeness of the Author,)

By JOHN C. GUNN, M. D.,

OF LOUISVILLE, KY.,

Author of the old work known as "GUNN'S DOMESTIC MEDICINE."

Also, AN APPENDIX, containg a popular treatise on ANATOMY, PHYSIOLOGY, and the LAWS OF HEALTH; the whole making a large octavo volume of

OVER ONE THOUSAND PAGES,

with numerous

VALUABLE ILLUSTRATIONS!

THIS is probably the best, as well as the most thorough and extensive book ever published, as a Domestic or Family Medical Work. Its author is now an old man, and is probably more generally known as a popular medical author than any man living, owing to the great popularity and extensive use of his old work, which was one of great value, but in the present advanced state of medical science is altogether behind the times. Dr G. is a graduate of several of the best Medical Colleges in the world, viz.: of Philadelphia, and of London and Paris. He has been a successful practising physician for nearly forty years: and it can be hardly supposed that any man can be better qualified to write such a work than he is. He has spent most of the time for several years in preparing this work—intending it, as he often remarked, as his last and greatest Legacy to Posterity.

The work contains a description of all the diseases known or common to this country—their causes, symptoms, and character—with plain and full directions for successfully treating them, telling what remedies to use; how to use them, and when; the whole stated in plain and simple language; or whenever any technical or Medical terms are used, they are fully explained; so that the commonest mind can understand them. The remedies recommended are generally of the simplest kind, such as are harmless, yet efficient, and usually such as are easily to be obtained.

Besides the diseases common to both sexes, the work contains a department on the diseases of Females, and their treatment. Also a department on the diseases of Children, which alone is to us the price of the book to mothers and all who have the care of children.

As an important item in the work is its Pharmacopia, or table of Family Receipts, there being more than forty pages of Medical Receipts and Compounds, many of which will be found very important and useful in a family.

☞ Remember that this Book can only be had of the Agents when he calls, and is not to be had either of the Author, or through Booksellers.

This Book will be delivered to subscribers during the Christmas holidays.

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT . . . DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair.

There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States beforementioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurance during the year, contained in 1169 Proposal	£454,838 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 961 Policies were issued	359,630 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS or said Policies	11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPATION POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees	22,999 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assured under 4,759 current LIFE POLICIES	1,955,95 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS	873,563 3 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE	94,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report Stated that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his entire approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £93,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 16s 7d., to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £217,321 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinized in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realized on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured; that the total additions to the sum assured, now vested, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured: and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 75 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

Year ending 31st January.	Amounts proposed for Assurance.	Amount of New Policies Issued.	No. of Policies Issued.	New Annual Premiums.	Total Revenue in each year.	Accumulated Funds.

FIRE INSURANCE.

THE following table compiled from the official returns, exhibits, at a glance, the increase of duty paid to the Government by the different Insurance Offices, metropolitan and provincial, during the year 1861.

THE "ROYAL,"

It will be seen, stands as before, at the very head of the list, and maintains a rate of progress very far in advance of all its rivals and competitors. Twelve months ago, we had the gratification of recording the fact that its increase, in the year 1860, had been more than double that of any other company—had exceeded 30 per cent., of the entire increase of all the London offices combined—and had, also exceeded 30 per cent, of the aggregate increase of the remaining twenty eight provincial offices. We have now the pleasure of inviting the attention of our readers to the testimony of these later returns, which show that in the year 1861, the increase of the "Royal" was very nearly sixty per cent, in excess of the increase of any other company—that there were but three offices which came even within fifty per cent. of it, and that it was actually more than one-sixth of the entire increase of the remaining forty-four offices, London and Provincial, put together. Comment upon such facts as these would be superfluous. They prove, unmistakeably, the continued advance of the "Royal" in the confidence and good opinion of the public. That advance has been, from the beginning, as remarkable as it has been rapid; and we cordially congratulate the directors and shareholders upon it, because we regard it as the just reward of prudent management, of liberal and honorable dealing, and of undoubted stability.

IMPH—M.

A NEW SONG WITH A NEW TITLE.

TUNE.—"Coo-ee-Noddy"

When I was a laddie langsyne at the schule,
The maister aye ca'd me a dunce and a fule;
For a' that he said I could ne'er understan'
Unless when he bawled, 'Jamie haud oot yer han'"
Than I gloom'd, and said 'Imph-m,"
I grunch'd and said "Imph-m"—
I wasna ower proud, but ower doure to say, A-y!

As day a queer word as lang-nebbits himsel'
He vowed he would thrash me if I wadna spell.
Quo' I, "Maister Quill," wi' a kin' o' a swither,
"I'll spell ye the word if ye'll me anither;
Let's hear ye spell 'Imph-m,'
That common word 'Imph-m,'
That auld Scotch word, 'Imph-m,' ye ken it
weans—A-y!"

Had ye seen hoo he glowr'd, hoo he scratched his big pate,
And shouted, "Ye villain, get out o' my gate!
Get aff to yer seat! yer the plague o' the schule,
The deil o' me kens if yer maist rogue or fule!"
But I only said "Imph-m,"
That common word, 'Imph-m,'
That auld-farran' 'Imph-m,' that stan's for an—A-y.

Ye've heard hoo the deil, as he wanchel'd thro' Beith
Wi' a wife in ilk oxter, an' ane in his teeth,
When some ane cried out, "Will ye tak' mine the morn?"
He wagg'd his auld tail, while he cockit his horn,
But only said 'Imph-m,'
That useful word 'Imph-m"—
Wi' sic a big mouthful, he couldn't say—A-y.

An' when, a brisk wooer, I courted my Jean—
O' Avon's braw lassies the pride and the queen,
When neath my gray plaidie, wi' heart beatin' fain,
I spiered, in a whisper, if she'd be my ain,
She blushed an' said 'Imph-m,'
That charming word 'Imph-m'—
A thousan' times better an' sweeter than—A-y.

An' noo I'm a dad, wi' a house o' my ain—
A dainty bit wifie, an' mair than ane wean;
But the warst o't is this—when a question I spier,
They pit on a look nae auld-farrant an' queer,
But ou'y say 'Imph-m,'
That daft-like word 'Imph-m,'
That vulgar word 'Imph-m,'—they winna say
—A-y.

See, I've gi'en ower the Imph-m—it's no' a nice word;
When printed on paper, it's perfect absurd;
An' if ye're ower lazy to open yer jaw,
Just haud ye yer tongue, an' nae naething ava;
But never say 'Imph-m,'
That daft-like word 'Imph-m'—
It's ten times mair vulgar than even braid A-y.

Miscellaneous.

The Times on Mr. Roebuck's Speech.

The reserve which has been so carefully and yet so thanklessly maintained by our public men in speaking of the American war has at length been broken. Mr Roebuck has spoken out, and to some purpose. As neither the reticence nor the forbearance of British statesmen has sufficed to preserve us from the rancorous animosity of the Federals, we cannot suffer much from any change of policy; but we may well expect that Mr. Roebuck's unqualified declarations will create no trifling commotion on the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. Roebuck does not, indeed, speak with the authority of a Minister, or with the practical responsibilities of political office, but he is an old and a distinguished politician, the representative of an important community, and renowned for his fearlessness and independence. So conscious, in fact, was he of the weight which would attach to his words that he purposely abstained, as he tells us, from delivering his mind in Parliament. He felt that if he were to say in the House of Commons what he has now said at Sheffield, the House would be held partially responsible for the opinions he expressed, whereas he wishes that responsibility to be wholly his own. For himself, he had no fear of speaking out, but he was unwilling to commit others to what might have been felt as embarrassing obligations. If such a speech as we yesterday reported had been successfully refuted, or supposed to carry the sense of the House. So Mr. Roebuck keeps silence till the Sheffield banquet, when, in the presence of a large, liberal, and intelligent audience, he gives utterance to his convictions amid incessant rounds of applause.

The Americans are now told some very hard things. They are told that by their insolent and domineering demeanour they have convinced the world of their unfitness for that Imperial power which they are striving at all risks to secure. An irresponsible people possessed of irresponsible and omnipotent power is a people that "cannot be trusted." The Americans pushed their ideas of self-government to the extreme of self-will, and, by dint of dispensing with all rule at home, had begun to think there was no law for them abroad. No nation in the world ever carried pretension to such a height. The "Monroe doctrine," by which they asserted an absolute or reversionary claim to the entire continent of America, and assumed only to tolerate the existence of other Powers as legitimate as themselves, was one of the most astounding claims ever advanced. In their dealings with European nations, and especially with ourselves, they took advantage of our known aversion from war to make us purchase peace at their own price, till they went at last a step too far in the affair of the Trent. A people so spoiled, and trained to habits of license by their own institutions, would be dangerous to the peace of the world if their power equalled their arrogance. It is fortunate, Mr. Roebuck thinks, that the Colossus is to be broken up. "It will not be a misery to any portion of their own country; it will be a good. They will be all the better governed, and they will be content to one of them expelled or bully another; but there will be no one of those enormous evils which is standing about seven miles from Peterborough."

P. M. TILLEY, Jr.
Peterboro', Sept. 1, 1862.

That is the ground now openly taken on the subject by a public man—one not unacquainted with America and her policy, and long cherished and widespread feelings of the body country-men. He thinks that the political creation which he once admired was rapidly developing itself—in the absence of all salutary checks upon popular arrogance—into a terrible and portentous monster, and he rejoices therefore, instead of grieving, over the disruption of the Union. The Americans will be all the better and the happier for being compelled, by division to adopt habits of self-control. Landmarks and frontiers, State rivalries and competing Administration, jealous neighbours and balanced jurisdictions may be troublesome things in their way, and unpalatable substitutes for indivisible sovereignty, boundless territory, and Imperial power; but the change may be very beneficial to American character. The necessity of calculating consequences, of consulting the opinions of others, of putting checks upon passion, and of giving and taking, as is done in the Old World, must conduce to the growth of that political humility which enters largely into political wisdom. "United we stand; divided we fall," is a motto which may be reversed for the occasion before us. United, the American States have fallen into such excesses of presumption that at last they have turned upon each other; divided, may learn enough political sobriety to insure their constitutional health. There is the case as stated by Mr. Roebuck, and the hit will be all the harder from the accuracy of the blow. Nobody can read the history of this desperate war without seeing that what the Federals most dread losing is precisely that which Mr. Roebuck tells them they ought to lose. They cannot endure parting with that power which Union gave them of bullying the more staid and patient States of the world. They cannot bear the idea of foregoing their "manifest destiny" to sink into a group of Governments bound to Old-World observances of modesty, forbearance, and decorum. A dissolution of the Union would reduce them to the level of humanity, and compel them to be watchful over their ways if they would live in peace and quietness.

This is so very like the truth that it will probably be received with unbounded indignation as an outrageous libel Yet it is becoming, we are sure, the common opinion of Europe. It is not, as the Americans love to say, a "morbid hatred of their institutions" which animates us, for if their Republic had but been peaceable and friendly we could have been well content to admire it at a distance. But there has been a growing conviction that a nation composed of uncontrolled and uncontrollable units must be dangerous in its external action to the peace of the world, and American public men have certainly done their best to give this conviction currency and force. At this moment we are openly threatened by the Northerners with chastisement for our neutrality, as Mr. Roebuck observed, has really been in their favour. This is where Democracy has failed. It was qualified, no doubt, to give men all these blessings of freedom, and all the benefits of equality, but it has proved in the end, and after a short trial, that equality creates discontents as fatal as those of inequality; that freedom may degenerate, for want of regulation, into mere lawlessness, and that men who have been accustomed to bully all other people end by fighting among themselves.

But, though we can thus to some extent explain and justify by the concurrence of European opinions Mr Roebuck's views of the effect of this disunion on the national character of Americans, and the future prospects of their several States, we are compelled to dissent entirely from the proposition with which, as a practical moral, he concluded his speech. He counsels immediate intervention as the best method of terminating bloodshed, restoring trade, and conciliating the goodwill and amity of the South. We do not think that any such results would be produced by our interference, but that on the contrary, the quarrel might be both protracted and embittered by the appearance of foreigners on the scene. It is very seldom, as Mr. Roebuck must well know, that foreign intervention has thankfully taken or profitably exercised. At present, whatever the Federals may say in the blindness of their fury, they must well know in their hearts, and confess, we should hope, upon reflection, that we are not answerable for any of the consequences which the war has entailed. It is their own war entirely, waged by their own choice and for their own objects, and unsustained even by those movements on our part on which the Southerners had calculated. We have been perfectly neutral in profession, and have even patiently allowed the Northerners to turn the operation of our neutrality to their own advantage. While we have thus abstained from offence, the war had been burning itself out, and, except for the administration of some fresh provocative—such as intervention might prove—there does really seem a hope that the struggle may cease for want of men to carry it on. By the admission of the President's own proclamation he is in urgent want of 300,000 men. He cannot get a thirtieth part of that number. The alternative, therefore, of conscription or peace is becoming daily more imperative. From the intelligence which we published yesterday it is further evident that conscription is likely to be found impractical. The failure of that resource would leave peace the only possible result, and no intervention, as things now stand, could either improve that result or promote it.

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION.—The powder mills at Hazardville, Ct., were blown up recently, causing a most appalling calamity. About 40 tons of powder was destroyed, the five wooden buildings were blown to atoms and six persons were killed outright, and a few injured. Scarcely a vestige of the buildings was left. The concussion was so severe that dwelling-houses within two miles were uprooted, trees uprooted, cattle and people prostrated, etc. The explosion was distinctly heard at Northampton and West Brookfield, a distance of over 30 miles. In Springfield panes were jarred in by an earthquake.—There will be great destitution in the vicinity, as many houses were rendered unfit to occupy.

Consanguineous Marriages.

The following statistics in regard to the effect upon offspring, of marriages between blood relations, have been prepared with the hope of calling attention to and discouraging such marriages. There is a law of nature which forbids such a union of kindred, although the penalty falls more severely upon the children than upon the parents.

Dr. Millingen, of Dublin, ascertained the situation of 154 families, the heads of which were related in the degrees of first second and third cousins, and in which there were 100 children who were deaf and dumb. In 34 families, there were two in each; in 14 families three in each; in 3 families, four in each; in one family, six and in one of 13 children, 7 of them were deaf and dumb. He says nothing of other diseases.

Dr. Bartoe of Liverpool, states that he found 170 cases where the parents were related as above. In 109 of them there were in each family one child deaf and dumb; in 38, two children; in 17, three children; in 3, four children; in 1, six; in 1, seven; and in another, eight. He omits to state the whole number of children in those 109 families, or whether any other defects existed, but here are 269 who are deaf and dumb.

The first number of the Social Science Review contains a paper on the statistics of the birth of deaf and dumb children. According to M. Boudin, the result is a very considerable percentage of deaf mutes. M. Boudin finds that consanguineous marriages take place in France in the ratio of 2 per cent, of the population; and that of the issue of such marriages the proportion of deaf and dumb children is 28 per cent in Paris, 25 at Lyons, and 30 at Bordeaux. At Berlin he has discovered that the number of deaf and dumb children born of Christian parents is 6 per cent, while that of the children of Jewish parents is 27 per cent; a result which he attributes to the fact that Jews intermarry with blood relations more frequently than Christians.

In New England, a distinguished gentleman ascertained that in 17 families where the parents were blood relations, there were 95 children, 44 of whom were idiotic, 12 scrofulous and puny, and one deaf. In one of these families, of 8 children 5 were idiotic.

Dr. Bemis of Kentucky reports, as the results of careful researches by reliable gentlemen throughout the United States, in the relationship above named 763 families, in which were 3 588 children, and 2,331 of them were defective; among 154 children where the parents were double cousins, 133 of them were defective.—N. Y. Observer,

A Skylark Preaching a Sermon.

There is no such thing as a song-bird natural to Australia; there are birds who chatter, birds who shriek, but no birds that sings. Well there was a young man who went from England as a gold-digger, and was lucky enough to make some money, and prudence enough to keep it. He opened a "store"—a kind of rough shop where everything from candles to clothes are sold—at a place called "The Ovens," a celebrated gold-field, about 200 miles from Melbourne. Still continuing to prosper, he, like a dutiful son, wrote to his father and mother to come out to him, and if they possibly could, to bring with them a lark. So a lark was procured, and in due time the old folks and their feathered charge took ship and departed from England. The old man, however, took the voyage so much to heart that he died; but the old woman and the lark landed in sound health at Melbourne and was speedily forwarded to Mr. Wilstead's store at the Ovens

It was on Tuesday when they arrived and on the next morning the lark was hung outside the tent, and at once commenced piping up. The effect was electric. Sturdy diggers—big men, with hairy faces and big brown hands—paused in the midst of their work, and listened reverently.—Drunken, brutal diggers left unfinished the sentence and looked bewildered and ashamed. Far and near the news spread like lightning—"Have you heard the lark?" "It is true, mate, that there is a real English lark up at Jock Wilstead's?" So it went on for three days, and then came Sunday morning. Such a sight had not been seen since the first spadeful of golden earth had been turned! From every quarter—east, west, north, and south—from far hills and from creeks twenty miles away, came a steady concourse of great rough Englishmen, all brushed and washed as decent as possible. The movement was by no means preconcerted, as was evident from the half-ashamed expression of every man's face. There they were, however, and their errand was to hear the lark! Nor were they disappointed. There, perched in his wood and iron pulpit, was the little minister; and as though aware of the importance of the task before him, he planted his erect and lifted up his voice, sang, then a sermon.

It was a wonderful sight to see, those three or four hundred men; some reeling on the ground; some sitting with their arms on their knees, and their heads on their hands; some leaning against the trees with their eyes closed, so that they might the better fancy themselves at home and in the midst of English corn-fields once more; but sitting, standing and lying, all were equally quiet and attentive; and when, after an hour's preaching the lark left off, the audience slowly started, a little low-spirited, perhaps, but on the whole much happier than when they came.—Boston's Home Pets.

BEN. FRANKLIN'S errand boy (and it is a high honor to be another man's errand-boy), turned up at Philadelphia, on the 4th, at the veteran celebration. His name is Col. Robert Carr, now 85 years old. Col. Carr was an errand boy in the office of Benjamin Franklin. He was an apprentice—one of the first to Benjamin Franklin Bache, Dr. Franklin's grandson. Over twenty-five years he was a printer, as the very head of his profession, having received the first gold medal from the American Association of Booksellers, established at New York, in 1809, "for general excellence in printing." The work exhibited was the Bible, an immense volume, published by Benj. Johnson.

The Duke and the Toad.

A STORY FOR CHILDREN.

The Duke of Wellington had noticed for several mornings, while standing at a window overlooking the park, a lad eight years old or thereabouts, stooping down at the butt of an elm tree, and apparently feeding some creature who lived in it. So wondering what the boy could be doing, one morning the Duke went out to see.

"What have you there, my lad?" he asked.

"My toad," the boy replied. "I come here every morning to give him some breakfast."

"Indeed!" said the Duke; "that is an odd fancy; boys do not often make pets of toads."

"Oh, I have done so," rejoined the lad, not knowing whom he was talking to, "all my holidays. But I am going to school to-morrow, and I shall not be able to feed the poor little fellow any more. See, there he is!" said the child, (Arthur Vyse,) and stooping down the Duke saw the bright eyes of the toad glittering out of a hole from which a knur had fallen.

"Well," said the Duke, "I will see that your toad is fed. I live near to here, and I can send him food now and then."

"Oh, thank you!" said the boy, with beaming eyes; and so they parted. About a month afterwards a letter came to the school for Arthur, with these words in it:

"Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington thinks Arthur Vyse will be glad to learn that his toad is in good health. It has been regularly fed by the Duke's servant excepting one morning, when the Duke of Wellington fed the toad himself."

Substitute for Coffee.

Among the many substitutes for coffee, I have tasted none which equals the kind I here with describe, when prepared with exact skill.

Take equal parts of good New Orleans or syrup molasses and water, and stir it as thick as you can with wheat bran. Spread it one-fourth to one-half inch in thickness on baking pans of tin or earthen, place it in a range oven, or other kind, and let it dry, bake, and then brown until the strong aroma of coffee is perceived in the room.

Boil and serve it up as other coffee, and if prepared just right, it will be nearer to good genuine Java, coffee than eye coffee, any other variety which I have tasted; in fact I have drank this kind on well prepared that good judges pronounced it Java Coffee. All this is to me quite astonishing, and I cannot explain the chemical action on the sugar or the matter covering the wheat; nevertheless, try it a few times, and you will realize a very cheap, delicious and wholesome beverage, adapted to the most sensitive nerves.—New York Observer.

HOW TO SELECT POULTRY.—A young turkey has a smooth, dark leg, feet supple and moist, and the end of the breastbone pliable like gristle. If the head is on, the eyes will be full and bright if fresh killed.

Fowls, when young, have smooth combs and legs. In other respects they are like young turkeys.

Young geese will have yellow bills and feet, and a pin head may be forced through the skin and breast. (It requires considerable pressure to thrust a pin through the breast of an old, tough goose.) If fresh, the feet will be pliable. The same rules apply to the selection of ducks.

As a general rule, all old birds have bony claws, that are not easily straightened. Young birds have pliant and easily yielding claws. The spurs of old turkeys and roosters are hard, long and sharp. Of young ones but the first development is seen.

POLAND TO BE SEPARATED FROM RUSSIA.—The administrative separation of the Kingdom of Poland from the Russian Empire is decided on. A Russian custom-house will be established at Kowno, and a Polish Douane at Kriborsk; the Grand Duchy of Lethuania will not form a part of Poland. The determination of restoring to Poland its administrative independence is attributed to the Emperor, and the Grand Duke Constantine has been appointed to carry out the plan! The Emperor, has appointed Councillor of State, Owanowski, to be Governor of Radom.

—The N.Y. Tribune says that 750 000 men have already been called out to suppress the foolish rebellion. Of these no less than 100,000 have been killed, permanently crippled or disabled; while another 100,000 are now languishing in hospitals, in private dwellings, or in Rebel prisons. Not a dollar less than $600,000,000 has already been expended by the government in its efforts to put down the rebellion, and still the rebels confront our armies with forces nearly, if not fully equal to our own—and adds, "The root, the heart, the vital force, and the impulse are all summed up in one word—Slavery!"

—The Montreal Advertiser says:—A few days of fine weather will enable the farmers of Lower Canada to save the largest crop of peas ever harvested in the Province. Other crops have improved wonderfully from the recent rains, and in districts where a month ago the prospect appeared all but hopeless, there is now as fair a promise of a bountiful harvest as can be desired. Shippers may prepare for at least a million and a half bushel of peas.

NEW COMET.—The appearance of a new Comet may be noted in the Northern portion of the heavens. It is the second comet of 1862, discovered first by Professor Tuttle of Cambridge University (U. S.), on the night of the 18th July last. The embryo of a tail was first discovered about the 31st ult. About the 29th inst., the comet is expected to attain its greatest brilliancy.

—The late election in North Carolina has resulted in the triumph of the Union party by a majority of over 40,000. The report says:—"

Frontier Difficulties.

There are troubles to be seen looming upon the Canadian frontier. The order of the War Department at Washington, forbidding the emigration of citizens of the United States, most either have been framed with too little regard to the foreign relations of the country; or the acting officials on the frontier must be labouring with an excessive and mistaken zeal. Each mail from the neighboring Province brings us reports of some act of questionable legality or of absolute outrage on the part of United States officers in their treatment of persons crossing or sailing on the Niagara River. One day a pic-nic party of Canadians is fired into because they happen to have approached too near the American shore. Another day the neglect of a boat's crew to answer instantaneously a military challange, provoked similar resort to extremities. And lest sight out of view the innumerable petty annoyances to which the anti-emigration edicts have given birth, there is enough to alarm us in the more serious instances such as those we have referred to, and in others of the same nature. The Canadian people, we trust, are equally disposed with the Home Government, not to judge hastily of the acts at an administration which has to deal, like that at Washington with a domestic quarrel of unprecedented magnitude. But we know that Canadians are a sensative people; that they present to this hour, in the old Niagara District the traditions and the sympathies of 1814; of Chrysler's Farm and Queenstown Heights, and that anything like an insult offered to their flag, which should appear to have the countenance of the American Government, would create a strong desire for resentment, and aggravate, in a serious degree, whatever bitter feelings have already been engendered.

It is in view of these facts, that we think temperate but firm representations should at once be made to the Government at Washington. For it is extremly unlikely that Mr. Seward, holding such assurances as he does, at this moment, from Earl Russell, of a desire to maintain an amicable relationship between the two countries, would consider it prudent or wise to risk a rupture of friendship for the sake even of so important a point in the Government policy as the absolute prohibition of the migration of citizens to British American territory. To imagine that such a migration, even under the strictest system of espionage, can be absolutely arrested, is to suppose an impossibility. All the detectives on this continent, with those of Europe to aid them, would be insufficient to guard the eight thousand miles of frontier from St. John, New Brunswick to New Westminister, British Columbia. The citizen who desires to shirk his duty to his country, can find a thousand underground roads into the bordering British territory, which all the vigilance of the United States Government agents will neither detect nor close up. On this point, Mr. Seward can be in no manner of doubt. He will find that the notorious George N. Sanders, who had only recently arrived at Niagara Falls, has just sailed in the Steamship Jura from Quebec to Liverpool, with dispatches from the Confederate Government to Great Britain. And while he may permit the War Secretary to exercise a reasonable amount of vigilance over the travel at the main frontier points, with a fair share of benefit to the national interests, and without imperilling in any degree the friendship of a friendly Power, we are willing to indulge the hope that he will see at once the folly and the danger of converting the Government agencies on the borders into a pestilence, or allowing them to minister to the latent disposition for quarrelling with Great Britain which a portion of his countrymen undoubtedly cherish.

In this connection, and looking to the complications which must inevitably arise out of the Conscription edict when once it is fairly in operation, we must be permitted to express the strongest regret that circumstances should require Lord Lyons to be absent from his post. The discretion with which Mr. Stuart has thus far conducted the affairs of the embassy in the absence of Lord Lyons, is not open to question. But the close personal intimacy and the frank nature of the correspondence which has passed between Mr. Seward and Lord Lyons during the past year, and added to this—the strong personal regard which is generally entertained for his lordship in this country—render it of unusual importance that his duties should not be performed vicariously, even for a day. On this point, we regard the remarks of Lord Malmesbury in the House of Lords on the eve of the adjournment as peculiary apropos. Before Lord Lyons returns—if, as is said, his sojourn is to be prolonged till October—there will be thousands of cases probably demanding consideration and adjustment. We are not of those who suppose that Mr. Seward's recent public intimation, that he does not hold British subjects who have merely given notice of their intention to become citizens liable for military duty, to be a settlement of the prospective difficulty of forced enlistments; for there are State laws, that will form the guide for the local officials, which will likely create a conflict with the foreign consular jurisdiction. It is therefore of great importance, for this reason, as well as to meet the possible troubles on the frontier, that the British ambassador should be early at his post.—Scottish American Journal.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT TO THE FEMALE BLONDIN.—The London papers state that a frightful accident took place at Highbury Barn on Thursday night, where a woman who was known as "the Female Blondin," and who was in the habit of imitating his feats, has been performing for some time past. A little after ten o'clock she commenced her performances on a rope elevated about 60 or 70 feet above the ground. She went through a considerable portion of her performances with her usual success; she had passed across the rope in the usual way, then in a sack, and afterwards in a wheelbarrow. She then started for the fourth journey, balanced with a heavy pole loaded with fireworks, which began to explode as soon as she commenced her journey. The fireworks, were balanced, an equal number on each side, and they went off, each at the proper moment, till she had performed about three-fourths of her journey, when some crackers on the right hand of the pole went off, a little sooner than those on the left. This appeared to disturb the performer's balance; she staggered, fell, caught the rope by her leg, and after hanging then for a moment of thrilling suspense to the audience, she fell heavily head foremost, to the ground. One deep groan was heard from the unfortunate woman, and she was carried inside insensible. The excitement in the audience, the shrieks and cries of the women and children, may be imagined. By telegraph, we learn the chief injury to the female Blondin is a fracture of the neck and of the thigh bone, but she has received many other injuries. She has been removed, at her own request, to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

THE WAR NEWS.

As will be seen from the extracts given, very stirring events have taken place since our last issue, leading to a general impression that this truculent and unnatural war is drawing to a close.

The chief object of attention is the fact that the Federals are being driven North; that in place of their taking Richmond they are, at last advices, but a short distance from Washington. It would appear as if the Confederates were determined to make a dash upon the Capital of the Federals, and it would not surprise us to hear of an attempt of the kind. Of course there is little or no prospect of a successful capture but the fact of their having driven their enemies so near Washington proves that they are able, notwithstanding their disadvantages, to cope with them, and shows that they have both pluck and skill.

A desperate battle was fought on Friday last, commencing at daybreak and ending at dark. General Pope claims the victory as the Southerners retired from the field; he admits, however, the loss of 8,000 in killed and wounded of his men, but says, "the enemy must have lost two for our one." The war is assuming unwonted activity, a sign we would fain hope that it will soon be over. The sacrifice of life on both sides is really fearful—a sacrifice, however, which seems cheerfully made on both sides to accomplish the objects each party has in view, the North to suppress rebellion, the South to establish her independence. What the issue will be is beyond human ken.

It seems from the complicated nature of the struggle to baffle all attempts at conjecture, so the soothsayers are silent, and the people must await the course of events. Meanwhile the derangement of commerce and stoppage of trade are being felt more or less by the whole civilized world. England feels it most severely at its cotton centres. France and the whole of Europe are affected. Canada, owing to its proximity and trade relations, suffers severely, and no wonder if a very general wish is expressed for peace, if for no higher motive than for the restoration of the healthy action of trade. The philanthropist is pained by the fearful loss of life, and the amount of suffering occasioned by the war. Friends mourn the death of the objects of their affections. The world looks on with interest and astonishment, while the republic of North America is convulsed with this internecine struggle. The Great Ruler of the universe has ends to accomplish in this as in all other national affairs, these we are convinced are both wise and beneficent. He can bring good out of evil. We therefore pray "Thy will be done on earth as it is in Haaven, for thine is the Kingdom, the power and the Glory."

POSTSCRIPT.—The war news as we go to press is to the effect that the Confederates are marching North and are being reinforced. Great excitement in Cincinatti—fearing a raid by the Confederates. The loss of the Federals at the recent battles are from 10,000 to 12,000 in place of 8,000. Two Federal Generals are reported killed. In Washington the Clerks in the civil departments are being armed by direction of the President.

DAN RICE'S GREAT SHOW.—The greatest show, engineered by the greatest showman, and exhibited to the greatest audiences ever congregated in any country, is to visit Peterborough, on Saturday the 13th inst. We allude to the show of Dan Rice, than whom there is no one more celebrated in his profession, who has followed it more assiduously, or has experienced in the pursuit more of the ups and downs of fickle fortune. Dan, as usual, has a host of attractions adequate to all and every emergency, and has prepared a series of pleasantries and features that must please the people. "He puts on the stripes," goes in and talks, and introduces that remarkable creature the blind horse, "Excelsior Jr." He has engaged the wonderful Seigrist family, including Mlle. Rose, retained young Charles Reed, F. H. Rosalee, and all his other standard artistes. As a matter of course, the never-failing Comic Mules will do in the ring.

A short time ago a Sergeant of the army in Quebec had occasion to remind one of the men of his company that he needed a new cap and a pair of shoes. The private meditated revenge, and for so trifling a cause, he coolly loaded his rifle, visited his opportunity, and deliberately shot his Sergeant. The deceased was a kind and exemplary officer, cut off in the midst of life, leaving a wife and six children to mourn their loss.

MR. CONGER AND THE LAND AGENTS.

In a late number we noticed what we considered a "job" of the late Government in appointing two addicted Land Agents in the rear of us. The appointments outside of the friends of the late Government are viewed in the same light as we indicated, but Mr Conger thinks otherwise, and tells us in his letter which we publish to-day, that in the appointment of Mr. Boswell—who is stationed due North from Bobcaygeon—the late Commissioner of Crown Lands was "only carrying out an understood policy of his own from the beginning, to stop the salaries of those gentlemen so soon as their respective roads were made!" That is, we suppose, such agents as Mr. Hughes, after remaining a certain time in office, were to have their salaries stopped, and then they were "to have something as an equivalent,"—pensioned off.

Mr. Vankoughnet failing to do so Mr. Conger trusts that the new Government will do an act of justice to Mr. Hughes.—This is precisely what we stated, that the Government committed an act of injustice to Mr. Hughes by the new appointment; and the way Mr. Conger proposes to mend it is to give Mr. Hughes "an equivalent,"—how or what he does not say. But the last Government he thinks did right in appointing Mr. Boswell, but wrong in stopping the salary of Mr. Hughes.

If we are rightly informed Mr. Hughes could as well attend to the duties at present performed by Mr. Boswell as not, and therefore we consider that the new appointment was not called for. We shall, however, have more to say on this subject again; our space forbids us to enlarge or we would go over Mr. Conger's letter seriatim.

One thing, we wish he would condense a little more, and be more careful of making charges which are not true. He says we have preferred a charge against Mr. Vankoughnet of stopping the salaries of some of his agents. We made no such charge, and his marking what he says in the 8th paragraph of his letter as a quotation deserves a severe rebuke. If he wishes to appear in our columns he must not repeat such false quotations, and keep more strictly to the points in hand. If he would re-read his manuscripts he would find room for amendment. Now if we had made the statement his pretended quotation implied, pray what has stopping Agent's salaries to do with 'Retrenchment.' Does Mr. Conger mean to charge us, because we advocate retrenchment, we would stop a public servant's salary?—this is the inference of his rebuke. What we found fault with was the shameless and unnecessary appointments by the last Government, of agents and officers not required by the public service. Mr. Conger has done some service to these Counties and has shown considerable public spirit, but unfortunately by pursuing at times a course he has chalked out for himself, not approved of by even his friends, he spoils all.

THE WEATHER.—John Frost has been paying us some visits of late, reminding us of the change of the season. On Sunday morning there was a hard frost, on Tuesday it was cold enough for an overcoat all day, on Wednesday morning everything was covered with a hoar frost. We fear potatoes, corn, beans, &c., will suffer in consequence. On the whole, the weather has been favourable for the harvesting.

☞ The present population of the United Kingdom is upwards of 30,000,000. The population of London is 2,803,034; that of Liverpool, 430,000; that of Manchester, 357,000: that of Glasgow—the second city of Great Britain—446,395.

☞ We have learned that a lumberman named John Milledge was found dead in the stable of Mr. Boswell, at the North end of the Town. We have also heard that the verdict of the Coroner's Jury was that deceased died from disease of the heart.

A Communication from a "Reformer," urging the duty of "holding a public Fast," is received, but was handed in too late for this week's issue. Communications to appear must be received before Wednesday.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

LETTER No. 10.

DUBLIN.

Dublin has the reputation of being the handsomest city in the United Kingdom, and as far as fine edifices can make it so, it deserves the name.

The Bank of Ireland, King William's Monument, the Castle, the Four Courts, the Custom House, the Lord Lieutenant's Mansion, the Barracks, Magazine, &c., and the Wellington and Nelson Monuments are structures which rival anything of the kind in the world, and no other place of its size can boast of so many. In many respects, however, Dublin is behind Belfast, as in the arrangement of its streets, docks, &c.

We found that the best and quickest way to see the city was to hire a low-backed jaunting car for three hours, which can be done for a smaller sum than a New York hackman would charge to drive a passenger half a mile,—and as we whirl along, our driver describes the objects of greatest interest in his own style, filling up the intervals with snatches of old Irish melodies. In a drive round the Park, the road in some places is very beautiful: long rows of thorn and elder trees stand in regular lines, forming a shaded pass, which, when the odor of the hawthorn wafted on the way, brought to our mind some fairy scene in nymphland.

About a mile from the city, on the banks of the river Liffy, are the celebrated strawberry beds, at one time a favorite resort for pleasure seekers, but now brought into much disrepute by its being frequented by drunken and disorderly crowds.

CORK.

From Dublin to Cork the distance by Rail is 164 miles, passing through a country of the richest soil. The principal stations on the line are Newbridge, Kildare, Maryborough, Balybrophy, and Malow.

The population of the city is variously estimated at from 80,000 to 100,000.

Though possessing neither the beauty of Dublin, nor the order and neatness of Belfast, Cork can boast of a harbour surpassing its sister cities, and it is said rivalling any in the world, being capable of affording shelter to the whole British navy. Cork also claims an ancient origin, and was a walled city back as far as the 7th century. The climate of this part of Ireland is spoken of with much praise. Dr. Scott says of it that "the salubrity of the climate is such that it has been chosen as a place of residence by many invalids who would otherwise have sought the far-off scenes of Montpelier or Madeira with less benefit."

Cork claims having a greater number of benevolent and charitable institutions than any other city in Ireland.

Shandon Church is one of the most noticeable of its buildings, being very grotesque looking, and built as if in storys of hewn-stone. Three sides of the steeple are built of limestone, and the fourth is of a red stone; its height is about 120 feet. A chime of bells in the steeple are very sweet and musical, and have given rise to many poems, from one of which, by the Rev. F. Mahony, we clip a couple of stanzas:

With deep affection
And recollection
I often think of
Those Shandon bells,
Whose notes so wild, would
In the days of childhood,
Fling round my cradle
Their magic spells.

I've heard bells chiming,
Full many a chime in,
Tolling sublime in Cathedral shrine;
While at a globe rate,
Brass tongues would vibrate,
But all their music
Spoke not like thine.

Distant only 5 miles, and easily reached, is known the wide world over from the connection with the mythical "Blarney stone," the fame of which is fast passing away.—The old tradition attributes to the stone the power of endowing any one who kisses it with eloquence. There is much dispute as to where the "real stone" is, many locating it about 20 feet from the top of the wall, in order to kiss which the person is let down by a rope round his heels. We remember when it was told a certain member of the Canadian Parliament (now an Honorable I perceive) that he had surely kissed the Blarney stone, but we never saw the force of the "bit" till we read the following lines in a popular Irish song, "The Groves of Blarney:"

BLARNEY CASTLE.

"Oh, there is a stone there
That whoever kisses,
Oh! he never misses
To grow eloquent.
'Tis he may clamber
To a lady's chamber,
Or become a member
Of Parliament.

A clever sposter
He'll sure turn out, or
An out-and outer
To be let alone!
Don't hope to hinder him
Or to bewilder him,
Sure he's a pilgrim
From the Blarney stone."

We regret that circumstances prevent our visiting the Lake District of Killarney, and we return northward, arriving after a dreary journey by rail of fourteen hours, at the town of LONDONDERRY.

This place presents the curious spectacle of "a hill in a hollow." From the river the town rises, and it begins to decline near the upper wall, appearing in the above shape from the elevated country around. The old walls of Derry are still in existence, and are in good repair, the four gates being preserved in their original style. On the wall is erected a monument to the memory of William the defender, and we are told the old guns are fired every anniversary of the Closing of the Gates, by the 'Prentice Boys. The old Cathedral is fast crumbling to ruins, and in the Church-yard repairs are being made to the final resting-place of those who fell in the defence of the town, they all having been buried in one grave.

The town is very irregularly built, but it has far out-grown the old wall-limits.

The river Foyle, which passes through Derry, is decidedly the most picturesque in Ireland. The Canadian Mail steamers call at a landing-place a few miles down the river, to receive and discharge mails and passengers, and a line of screw steamers ply regularly to Glasgow, Scotland, from which place you may next expect to hear from your correspondent,

R——.

THE last Canada Gazette contains the following, under General Militia Order No. 2:—

UNATTACHED.

To be Lieutenant-Colonel:

Frederick William Haultain, Esquire, late a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Royal Artillery.

No. 5.—His Excellency the Governor General and Commander-in-Chief having obtained from His Excellency the Lieutenant General Commanding Her Majesty's Forces, the services of the non-commissioned officers of Her Majesty's Service sent from England for the purpose of drill and instruction to the Militia, is pleased to place the same at the disposal of the Militia, and to have them detailed for duty as follows, viz:

Peterborough.—Lt. Col. Haultain, two drill instructors, Infantry, Peterborough, Cobourg, Bowmanville and Port Hope.

His Excellency desires to impress strongly on the Officers under whose orders such Drill Instructors are or may be placed, that these Drill Instructors are furnished free of expense to those whom they instruct; and that such Officers are to endeavour, as far as possible, to make the services of such Instructors available not only for the Corps of the Active Force already in existence, but also for such others as may be hereafter organized in their respective localities, and gazetted; and further, for instruction to such of the Sedentary Militia or Drill Associations within their neighbourhoods as may desire to procure military instruction. It will be therefore incumbent on the Officers, under whose orders the Drill Instructors are so placed, to make such arrangements as that the convenience of several Corps or Drill Associations shall be consulted, at the same time with the economy of transport of the Instructors from one place to another, and the making of their services the most available.

The Commander-in-Chief is also pleased to call the attention of the Militia to the fact that these Drill Instructors being only temporary resident in the Province for the special service assigned to them, it is especially incumbent on officers and non-commissioned officers, both of the Active and Sedentary Militia, to acquire such a knowledge of and proficiency in their drill and military duties, as will enable them on the departure of the Drill Instructors, to impart, from time to time, the knowledge thus acquired to those who may be under their command.

Report of the Volunteer Commission.

The report of the Volunteer Commissioners, which is looked forward to with so much interest by every Volunteer, is in the printer's hands, and will be distributed to members in the course of the week. The Commissioners have gone thoroughly into the whole question, and they have, it is understood, agreed to the following recommendations:—They propose that the staff of drill sergeants shall be continued as at present, and be paid out of the national funds. Next, that every effective be entitled to receive 1*l.* per annum; that is to say that the commanding officer is to be allowed the amount to be applied as he shall think best, but for the advantage of the corps. If it is applied for clothing, then the officer commanding is restricted in the choice of four colours—viz., blue for Artillery and Engineers, and green, gray, or scarlet for the Rifles. The gray to be in accordance with the colour selected by the War-office, the Lords-Lieutenant of counties having a veto on the colour, so that they may make the Volunteers in counties as nearly similar as possible. The Commissioners further recommend that a sum of 10*s.* per man be allowed to all those who have passed through certain stages in musketry practice, and have obtained certificates of efficiency. The recommendation is one which we regard as of great importance, as upon the skill in the use of the rifle the real efficiency of the Volunteer force mainly depends. This premium on excellence of shooting will have a most beneficial effect. Officers of regiments and companies will urge their men on to practice with the view of obtaining the extra 10*s.* per man. In many small corps, should the whole of the men be made effective—which is not only possible, but easy to accomplishment—the 30*s.* per man will suffice to keep the corpse in good working order. Without this aid the number of men would gradually fall off. The Commissioners, in addition to these gratuities, propose to give a further sum of 4*s.* per head for the Volunteers living beyond five miles from headquarters, or the usual place of drill. This sum is given with the view of assisting Volunteers engaged in agricultural pursuits, who cannot afford the expense of riding to the place of rendezvous, and is proposed for the purpose of indousing countrymen to don the Volunteer uniform and to carry the rifle. These are the principal recommendations of the Commissioners, and we believe they will not meet with general approval. At present the sum voted in aid of the Volunteers does not exceed £40 000. per annum. Should the proposed changes be carried into effect, the charge upon the country will be increased to about £170.000 or £180,000.—Observer.

A HINDOO DIFFICULTY.—The Madras Times tells the following story:—"During the late sitting of the Legislative Council in Calcutta one of the members—a native of high rank and caste—prepared the draft of a bill prohibiting the killing of cows at the four most holy cities in India—viz., Juggernaut Benares, Muttra, and Bindraban. He showed the draft to another native member of the Council, and asked him to second the proposal. The person spoken to replied that he, being himself a Brahmin, could not be supposed to be a friend of cow-killing, but that he must decline to second the proposal on two grounds—first, he thought the time was gone by when there was any chance of such a bill being carried; and secondly, he considered that a bill prohibiting the slaughter of cows at four places mentioned would by instalment to admitting that cows might lawfully be killed at all other places—an admission not to be thought of without a shudder. On this the framer of the draft tore it up."

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

New York, Aug. 29.

The Alexandria correspondent of the New York Tribune states that on Tuesday night about 8 o'clock the pickets at Manassas Junction were driven in, and two companies of the 105th Pennsylvania infantry, two companies of Pennsylvania cavalry, and some artillery stationed there, were surprised and attacked by Gen. Wade's entire division, numbering from 7,000 to 10,000 infantry and cavalry, with artillery. After a short skirmish the handful of men at the Junction fled, the confederates turning upon them 9 of our guns and keeping up a brisk fire till the Union troops were taken prisoners, a few escaping across Bull Run. Here at Union Mills two regiments of Gen. Cox's division, the 11th and 12th Ohio, under Col. Scammon, were stationed, and they immediately advanced to meet the approaching body of Confederates. A conflict ensued in the early morning between the Junction and Bull Run, lasting for 3 hours, when the Union troops being largely outnumbered and flanked on the right retreated across Bull Run bridge. Here a vigorous attempt was made by Col. Scammon to hold the bridge.

At eleven o'clock two Confederate regiments forced the Run above the bridge, when the 12th Ohio charged on them and drove them across the river with heavy loss. In this skirmish Capt. D. W. Pauly was wounded slightly. The regiment lost in killed, wounded, and missing 35 to 40 men.

The Confederates advanced across Bull Run, and yesterday afternoon their advance cavalry were at Fairfax and Burtis stations. On taking possession of Manasses Junction, the Confederates captured seven trains loaded with provisions, ammunition, &c., and ten locomotives, all of which they destroyed. Of the 84 men of the 150th Pennsylvania on the ground, nearly all were killed wounded or taken prisoners, as only three are known to have escaped. Our loss has been immense in government stores and a large number both in killed and wounded are missing.

Fighting also was carried on with portions of the division of Gen. Sturges, and nine pieces of artillery are said to have been captured by the Confederates. As this goes to mail, I learn that telegraphic communication is again opened with General Pope. Manassas, therefore, must be clear of the Confederates, and General Stuart, if not taken, is probably winding his way through the Blue Ridge to join the main body of his army.

The enemy was encamped some 20,000 or 30,000 strong at Gainesville near Manasses Junction. At two o'clock on Thursday, a.m., a large portion of Taylor's Jersey Brigade was captured at Fairfax Station.

The Confederates on Tuesday night burnt the bridges at Accotink and Pope's Run, and are supposed to be moving off to evade pursuit.

The Alexandria correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer, dated Thursday, says the enemy succeeded in holding their own in the vicinity of Manassas, and got down as far as Burk's Station.

The Washington Star of last evening says there was an engagement on Wednesday evening between Seammons' brigade and a heavy force of Confederates, for the possession of the railroad bridge at Bull Run. The Confederates hold possession at nightfall, but it is believed that Scammon would dislodge them on Thursday morning.

Gen. Hooker's division had an engagement on Wednesday morning with a large Confederate force near Bristone's Station, lasting all day. Hooker drove the Confederates step by step back to the vicinity of Manassas. Our loss in this division is about 300.

The same paper says that the Confederates succeeded in throwing most of their army across the Rappahannock at the base of the Blue Ridge, massing them at the White Plains, seven miles from Warrenton. It is evident they aim to get between Gen. Pope's army and the fortifications around Washington, and having done so they would have a lively time in getting out of this position.

The movements of our vast army, now in the enemy's rear, leads to the belief that a very few days will see the end of the Confederates in arms in Virginia.

Twenty-four hours, the Star says, will solve the problem.

It is said that the Confederates have destroyed the bridge over the Occotick Creek which is five miles this side of Manasses, Bell Run and Centreville.

It is also said that the Confederates have captured two out of four New Jersey regiments stationed at Centreville.

General Hooker's brigade is reported to have checked the advance of the Confederates at Centreville, and driven them back to Manassas.

Alexandria, Va., Aug. 28.

This morning about half-past eight o'clock Stewart's confederate cavalry made a dash through Fairfax Court House on their way to Vienna, which is about 13 miles from Washington. Union people of that place have all fled to this city.

A fight is going on to-day, it is reported, at Manassas. Heintzelman, from Pope's advance, had, it was rumored, got into Jackson's rear, who was supposed to be 20,000 strong. The firing was distinctly heard here all day.

Alexandria, August 31.

BY MAIL.—According to all accounts, Stonewall Jackson yesterday succeeded in forcing his way through the Federal troops, surrounding him, and effected a junction with the remainder of the Confederate forces. This result was not attained without fearful loss on both sides as the most desperate fight took place.

From all that can be learned in the absence of any regular report, the corps of Gen. McDowell, Heintzleman, Porter and Siegel were engaged, the former having left the latter to the right, and the others operating about the centre. The principal part of the fighting seems to have been on the left and centre. The left was thrown up from Manassas Junction toward Thoroughfare Gap, the right about Centreville, and the centre on the old Bull Run battle field, east from Manassas.

The action was commenced by the enemy opening his batteries upon the left between one and two o'clock p.m. Their guns were strongly and advantageously posted upon a ridge, while our batteries had to fire from the open plain.

Gen. Morrell's division supported our batteries at this point. After some severe cannonading, Gen. Beford's regiment of cavalry, comprising the 1st. Michigan, 1st. Virginia, and 1st. Vermont, were ordered to our extreme left to reconnoitre, and guard against any attempt to turn our left flank, which movement was threatened by the enemy. Riding beyond our left, where our infantry were formed close behind our batteries, which were playing on the enemy with great precision while our troops were observing vociferously, our cavalry reached a slight eminence, and were about to send out a detachment to explore, when the enemy was seen coming in large force along the line of the adjacent woods.

A Confederate battery was now in rapid position and threw some shell into the midst of our cavalry, followed by carabine and grape. Then was discovered the intention of the enemy to attempt a flank movement. Long lines of Confederate infantry could plainly be seen hurrying to take position, and soon other Confederate batteries were brought up and opened on our left. Our Cavalry, forced to retire, retreated behind a low ridge, but the clouds of dust revealing their place of retreat the Confederates continued shelling them, and another change of position was made. Here a body of cavalry was observed riding towards the spot, and the sabres of our cavalry were drawn to meet the foe. The squadron proved to be friends.

The 44th New York cavalry where they had come from as Gen. Siegel was on the right was a mystery. They repulsed the Confederate army under Gen. Stuart, as about making a charge. The New York Cavalry fell in behind Gen. Buford's brigade, the bugles sounded and over the hill galloped our men to meet the advancing Confederates. As our men approached them the Confederate Cavalry discharged doubled-barreled shot guns and then met us in full charge. Our men broke the enemys line and pursued them.

The Confederates rallied in splendid style and dashed forward again to meet the charge. Again their line was broken, and, as our Cavalry was preparing to charge the Confederates opened fire upon them from their batteries and musketry compelling them to retire.

Philadelphia, Sept. 1.

The New York Tribune's report of the second battle of Bull's Run produced the greatest excitement in this city on being posted on the Bulletin boards. In some cases altercations occurred between the excited friends and opponents of General McClellan. About noon, the Tribune's despatches were torn from the boards, on information being received that the Government had ordered the Tribune office to be closed in consequence of the publication of this horrible rumor.

—At a public meeting held in Buffalo a few days since Ex-President Fillmore is reported to have said, that he would do nothing to excite the ire or provoke the hostility of his Canadian neighbours, and they were for the most part friendly; an immediate outbreak was not anticipated, but he would advise his fellow citizens to heed the lessons which history had taught all nations. "In time of peace prepare for war," hence it would be well to have our Northern frontiers well fortified.

Is this not a lesson to us to fortify our Southern frontiers? and while doing so would it not be well to fortify ourselves against the attacks of Rheumatism, coughs, colds, cholics, bowel complaints, and all other diseases incident to the climate by supplying ourselves with the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." Communications.

To the Editor and Proprietor of the Peterborough Examiner.

SIR,—The Editor of the Peterborough Review having refused to publish the accompanying letter in reply to B. A.'s personal attack on me in his paper of the 22nd inst., except in a mutilated form, I take the liberty of asking an insertion of it in your next issue.

I am,
Your ob'dt serv't,
W. S. CONGER.

Peterboro', 30th August, 1862.

To the Editor of the Review.

DEAR SIR,—I observe that your correspondent B. A. has taxed his time and ingenuity in criticising my letter on the appearance of the Plant-Louse, published in your paper of the 15th inst. In the exercise of that right B. A. has in my opinion shown a desire to indulge in a little ill-natured sarcasm which might as well perhaps have been omitted, and has attempted to draw conclusions from my letter which its language does not warrant. While the over weening pedantry, and spirit of dictation displayed throughout his whole communication is quite in keeping with the well known character of its author. Witness, for instance, his excessive modesty when he says that he did not, after reading Professor Buckland's letter, consider further notice of the subject necessary.

It may have been an act of presumption on my part to write, and of you to publish anything on the subject of Entomology without B. A.'s consent, but a long indulged habit of seeing, thinking and forming opinions for myself has become so strongly engrafted upon my nature that it is more than probable I shall continue to do so, regardless of whether such opinions are in unison with those of B. A. or not.

B. A. commences by saying, that "he had read the communications of Professor Buckland and myself, respecting the appearance, this year, of an insect with whose antecedents but few agriculturalists in Canada seem to be familiar, and whose advent has, in consequence, produced a more or less inconsiderable amount of alarm," and proceeds to say that Professor Buckland's letter was so satisfactory to him, as emanating from such a source, that he scarcely thought further notice of it necessary. Why this change of mind? Let us, however, before we proceed further, examine the letter of Professor Buckland, and ascertain what those opinions were which gave to this distinguished author and critic, such unqualified satisfaction as to induce him to offer them with his endorsation to the farmers of Peterborough in opposition to mine, and one in what particular they differ from those I have ventured to express.

"In hope," says Professor Buckland, "the Aphis is often very destructive, but among grain its devastations are seldom of an alarming character, although in appearance the vast numbers seem exceedingly formidable. I have often seen fields of the horse bean in England," says Professor B, "very much affected by the Aphis, and yet a pretty good crop has been obtained, —no doubt their presence is generally more or less injurious, but nothing like Midge or Hessian-fly. I am in hopes that you and your neighbours will not find it this year so injurious in the result as present appearances may seem to indicate; as to remedy we are almost powerless, the insect appears to be a new comer in your part of the country."

So much for Professor Buckland's letter and opinions. In my letter I spoke of the insect as a "new and formidable grain depredator," and in my concluding paragraph said: "what amount of damage this heretofore unknown foe may do is at this moment impossible to determine, that it will be serious I have little doubt."—And pray how much has has Professor Buckland said? Has he not also declared these insects to be destructive, formidable in their appearance, and, beyond doubt, injurious. And yet, notwithstanding the great similarity of opinion expressed in the letters of Professor Buckland and myself, B. A., with his usual regard for truth and fairness, approves of the one and condemns the other.

But suppose for a moment that Professor Buckland's opinions—which were given on the 20th of July, before the insect had shown itself in any great force—had in some measure differed from those I ventured to express as the result of an examination made by Mr. Parvey and myself, on the 11th of August, at a time when these insects were most numerous. Would it in any way have effected my statement? And were we not at that time in a better position to judge of the probable effect they would produce upon the crops than those whose examinations were made three or four weeks before at a time when the insect first made its appearance?

B. A. also questions the correctness of my description—though he does not venture to say in what particular I have erred. In reply to this I may simply state that while I make no pretensions to the science of Entomology, I challenge B. A., or any one else who has made similar examinations, to show wherein I am wrong. My description of the insect and its operations upon the fields of grain we visited, was given precisely as we saw it, and as it then appeared, omitting entirely to notice any of the fine drawn theories of Naturalists as to its nature and habits. Leaving such of your readers as were desirous of obtaining more minute information to consult the writings of Reaumer, Kirby, Curtis, Dr. Fitch or Professor Hinds, where they could find all they desired quite as well as if reproduced by B. A. or myself. It is true I did not fill my communication with high sounding words selected from works upon the science of Entomology. But I believe I made myself fully understood by that class of your readers who are most interested in the matter. And although on the occasion of which I speak, I had not the assistance of those brilliant eyes which B. A. says "assisted him in watching the operations of his diminutive grave digger," yet I had the assistance of two experienced and highly intelligent Farmers, quite as able to judge of what they saw, and what I attempted to describe, as Professor Buckland himself, and who fully concurred in the views I expressed.

In conclusion I will give you for B. A.'s especial benefit, the following opinions of Professor Hinds, whose essay on the Weevil and other grain destroyers obtained the first prize in 1857.

Professor Hinds in his admirable essay speaking of the Aphis, says:—"The wonderful fertility of this tribe of insects exceeds that of any known species, and elevates them to a position in the scale of pests and plagues which secures for them the second if not—in many temperate climates—the first place among insect depredators. A few weeks is sufficient to convert a handful of these viviparous and oviparous insects into countless legions, which, taking flight, darken the air by their numbers." I must also, before closing this already long letter, respectfully advise B. A. to extend his reading, and before he again ventures upon unknown ground, to understand his subject.

As for his sneer about the chances of my being offered a fellowship in the society of Natural History, he will permit me to say that it is possible my chances are quite equal to those of the learned delineator of the insect "Grave digger," and would-be Professor of Entomology.

I am your ob't s'v't,
W. S. CONGER.

Peterboro', 26th August, 1862.

P. S.—Since writing the above I have seen many Farmers, and reg

the township of Smith, connecting the Burleigh road with the present travelled road at Young's Mills—made as much progress as it should have done. Notwithstanding this serious impediment, there are now a number of settlers upon those lands, and many more preparing to go in immediately after harvest. Nearly all the free grants in Chandos, Anstruther, and Cardiff are located, and during the last month over ten thousand acres have been taken up by persons intending to become actual settlers in these townships, and the present prospect of affairs indicates that the settlement in this agency will be a great success. The duties of the Agent, therefore, whose business it also is, to superintend the making of the roads and look after the free grants—are not trifling, and if properly attended to, as I believe they will be, require his whole time.

I observe, also, that you have preferred another charge against the late Ministry, which is not quite in keeping with your professions of Retrenchment, " that the Commissioner of Crown Lands (Hon. Mr. Vankoughnet) had stopped the salaries of some of his agents, thereby inflicting great injustice upon one of them."

Without expressing any opinion upon the particular case referred to, I may venture to assert that the Commissioner in doing so was actuated by no improper motive.

I do not mean to say that it was right to leave either the agent at Bobcaygeon, or the agent at Hastings, or the agent of any other of these roads, who were thus deprived of a portion of their incomes without sufficient remuneration for their time and services, but in doing so he was, I believe, only carrying out an understood policy of his own from the beginning—to stop the salaries of these gentlemen so soon as their respective roads were made. My own opinion is that it was wrong to do so without giving them something else as an equivalent, and this, I fully believe, Mr. Vankoughnet intended to do. As he did not, the present government have it in their power to do an act of justice, which I trust they will not neglect to perform.

The agency at Bobcaygeon for the sale of lands in the ten or eleven townships attached to it, cannot by any possibility be dispensed with—the agent there should be in daily attendance to make sales, collect arrearages, and give information to intending settlers. To expect, therefore, that the work of two or 3 others, could be performed by this one, though he was receiving the united salaries of all, would be absurd. The Bobcaygeon Road is 120 miles in length—the first 40 miles between Rouklby and Petersons road was placed under the superintendence of Mr. Hughes, who was then, as now, agent for the sale of the lands in all the townships adjacent to the Bobcaygeon road in both counties. The Superintendance of the Northern section of the Bobcaygeon Road, from Peterson's Road to Lake Nipissing, with the settlement of free grants on each side of the road has been given to Mr. Boswell, who in making considerable progress in settling the same. Looking at the amount of work required to be done successfully to carry out the plan of settlement, I believe the number of persons employed by no means too large, the great object is to have the work done—honestly and efficiently—and at as little cost as a due regard for public interests will permit. It is of far more importance in my opinion that the imigrant and intending settler should be properly cared for after he reaches our shores and the neighborhood he intends to make his home, than that he should at great expense be induced to come to us, and after his arrival here be permitted to find land as he best can, or become the prey of some Yankee Railroad swindler, who entices him away to the Western States.

I contend that the advantages to the country are not to be counted by the number of dollars which may be saved out of the sale and management of the waste lands of the crown, but by the number of honest and industrious settlers we may place thereon, who will speedily become producers as well as consumers, thereby adding largely to the annual revenue of the Province, and its means of defence.

Let it be the duty of the press to look well to this and allow no party political prejudice to check the progress of this great national work, the advancement of which will not only add to the business and prosperity of Peterboro but the Province at large.

The first thirty miles of the Bobcaygeon Road, between Rouklby and Gull River, over which there is at this moment an immense travel, requires some repairs beyond that which the inhabitants themselves are able to do. Let the government have this done under the superintendence of the Agent at Bobcaygeon, and let the connecting link with the Burleigh road, in Smith, be made at once, and then we shall be in a position to give to intending settlers greater encouragement, and to our Agents more work.

I am, Sir,
Your obd't serv't,
W. S. CONGER.

Peterboro', 30th Aug., 1862.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Music.

Mr. Editor,—Education in general is our day is receiving a large measure of attention, while laudable efforts are put forth to promote it. But the subject of Music, which should ever be regarded as a branch of education, has been in many parts too much and too long neglected. It is gratifying, however, to find that there is now abroad a more general conviction of its importance. Still, it would be more desirable to see so important a subject receive more attention and encouragement. The music we wish to see cultivated is linked with poetry and employed to carry to the heart some cheerful sentiment, some lofty thought, or some soothing emotion. Its importance to education, thus understood, is not easily overrated. Who does not know that vocal music promotes the right use of the organs of voice, and helps to improve the enunciation; that it promotes a healthy action of the lungs and of the vessels of the chest, and that it soothes the weary and excited frame. It will cultivate the habit of attention, and the powers of perception and imagination. So it is highly conducive to physical and intellectual, as it is to moral and religious education. And let it not be forgotten that it is the duty of all to cultivate this most interesting branch of education.

In order to learn music easily and thoroughly a competent teacher must be of inestimable advantage. Professor Hopkins, who is at present teaching an interesting class in town, is a gentleman who appears to be not only a thorough master of the subject himself, but a most excellent teacher. His system of teaching we believe to be the most pleasing and best with which we are acquainted. He makes the subject as simple and plain, bringing it down to the level of every one's capacity, while at the same time he goes to work in a philosophical manner. Like a wise master builder he lays the foundation deep and strong, and then—but not till then—does he begin to build thereon, and, if we might expect, the superstructure will become such a foundation will be stable and durable. He gives great attention to the seven primary sounds, in which he drills his class most thoroughly at the commencement of every lesson. This has been the great deficiency of all the teachers we have been acquainted with before. The progress made by his class in so short a period of time is highly creditable to him indeed. If they follow up the instructions they have received, and reduce to practice the principles he has been inculcating, with the help of Dr. Everett's Elements of Vocal Music, a book which he has introduced into the class, and can be had from himself at 25 cents, they may expect to master the subject pretty well. Could that gentleman be induced to remain longer among us and give another course of lessons, we doubt not the most gratifying results would be realized. Will not his present class try to secure this desirable end? Wherever he goes we are sure he will carry with him their good wishes, and their earnest desire that he may be eminently successful in the work to which he has devoted himself.

ALSO:

A Complete Materia Medica,

or, list of all the principal remedies used in the treatment of disease, including nearly

200 MEDICAL PLANTS, HERBS AND VEGETABLE REMEDIES,

with descriptions of each, and directions for preparing and using them. (With an elegant and correct Likeness of the Author,)

By JOHN C. GUNN, M. D.,

OF LOUISVILLE, KY.,

Author of the old work known as "GUNN'S DOMESTIC MEDICINE."

Also, AN APPENDIX, containg a popular treatise on ANATOMY, PHYSIOLOGY, and the LAWS OF HEALTH; the whole making a large octavo volume of

OVER ONE THOUSAND PAGES,

with numerous

VALUABLE ILLUSTRATIONS!

THIS is probably the best, as well as the most thorough and extensive book ever published, as a Domestic or Family Medical Work. Its author is now an old man, and is probably more generally known as a popular medical author than any man living, owing to the great popularity and extensive use of his old work, which was one of great value, but in the present advanced state of medical science is altogether behind the times. Dr G. is a graduate of several of the best Medical Colleges in the world, viz.: of Philadelphia, and of London and Paris. He has been a successful practicing physician for nearly forty years; and it can be hardly supposed that any man can be better qualified to write such a work than he is. He has spent most of the time for several years in preparing this work—intending it, as he often remarked, as his last and greatest Legacy to Posterity.

The work contains a description of all the diseases known or common to this country—their causes, symptoms, and character—with plain and full directions for successfully treating them, telling what remedies to use; how to use them, and when; the whole stated in plain and simple language; or whenever any technical or Medical terms are used, they are fully explained; so that the commonest mind can understand them. The remedies recommended are generally of the simplest kind, such as are harmless, yet efficient, and usually such as are easily to be obtained.

Besides the diseases common to both sexes, the work contains a department on the diseases of Females, and their treatment. Also a department on the diseases of Children, which alone is worth the price of the book to mothers and all who have the care of children.

An important item in the work is its Pharmacy, or valuable Family Receipts, there being more than forty pages of Medical Receipts and Compounds, many of which will be found very important and useful in a family.

☞ Remember that this Book can only be had of the Agent, when he calls, and is not to be had either of us, direct, or through Booksellers.

Severe, Wilcomb, Keys & Co.,
25 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati.

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair. There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States before-mentioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurance during the year, contained in 1189 Proposal	£454,836 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 981 Policies were issued	359,680 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS or said Policies	11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPATING POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees	32,999 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assured under 4,759 current LIFE POLICIES	1,955,95 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS	373,563 3 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE	86,758 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report Stated that both the principles of Valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his entire approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £93,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 16s 7d., to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next Investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £717,821 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinized in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realized on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto: also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured: that the total additions to the sum assured, now vested, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured: and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 75 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

FIRE INSURANCE.

THE following table compiled from the official returns, exhibits, at a glance, the increase of duty paid to the Government by the different Insurance Offices, metropolitan and provincial, during the year 1861.

THE "ROYAL,"

it will be seen, stands as before, at the very head of the list, and maintains a rate of progress very far in advance of all its rivals and competitors. Twelve months ago, we had the gratification of recording the fact that its increase, in the year 1860, had been more than double that of any other company—had exceeded 30 per cent., of the entire increase of all the London offices combined—and had, also exceeded 30 per cent, of the aggregate increase of the remaining twenty eight provincial offices. We have now the pleasure of inviting the attention of our readers to the testimony of these later returns, which show that in the year 1861, the increase of the "Royal" was very nearly sixty per cent, in excess of the increase of any other company—that there were but three offices which came even within fifty per cent. of it, and that it was actually more than one-sixth of the entire increase of the remaining forty-four offices

THE WORN WEDDING RING.

TO THE DOCTOR'S WIFE.

Your wedding ring wears thin, dear wife; ah, summers not a few,
Since I put it on your finger first, have passed o'er me and you.
And, love, what changes have we seen—what cares and pleasures, too—
Since you became my own dear wife, when this old ring was new.

Oh! blessing on that happy day, the happiest of my life,
When thanks to God, you [illegible] "Yes," made you my loving wife,
Your heart will say the same, I know; that day's as dear to you,
That day that made me yours, dear wife, when this old ring was new.

How well do I remember now, your young sweet face that day;
How fair you were—now dear you were—my tongue could hardly say:
Nor how I doated on you; ah! how proud I was of you;
But did I love you more than now, when this old ring was new?

No—no; so fairer were you then than at this hour to me,
And dear as life to me this day, how could you dearer be?
As sweet your face might be that day as now it is 'tis true,
But did I know your heart as well when this old ring was new?

O partner of my gladness, wife, what care, what grief is there,
For me you would not bravely face—with me you would not share?
O what a weary want had every day, if wanting you,
Wanting the love that God made mine when this old ring was new.

Years bring fresh links to bind us, wife—young voices that are here,
Young faces round our fire that make their mother's yet more dear,
Young loving hearts, your care each day makes yet more like to you,
More like the loving heart made mine when this old ring was new.

And bless'd be God, all he has given are with us; yet around
Our table, every little life lent to us, still is found;
Though care we've known, with hopeful hearts the worst we've struggled through,
Blessed be His name for all His love since this old ring was new.

The past is dear: its sweetness still our memories treasure yet;
The griefs we've borne, together borne, we would not now forget;
Whatever, wife, the future brings, heart unto heart still true,
We'll share as we have shared all else since this old ring was new.

And if God spares us 'mongst our sons and daughters to grow old,
We know his goodness will not let your heart or mine grow cold;
Your aged eyes will see in mine all they've still shown to you,
And mine in yours all they have seen since this old ring was new.

And O, when death shall come at last to bid me to my rest,
May I die looking in those eyes, and resting on that breast;
O may the parting gaze be blessed with the dear sight of you,
Of these fond eyes—fond as they were when this old ring was new.

Miscellaneous.

The Late General Beckwith.

Amedeo Bert, a Waldensian pastor, thus speaks of this noble old soldier, who has lately died at Pignerolo among the people he loved and served so well:—"Last week the Valdensians of Pignerolo and its neighbourhood accompanied to his last dwelling-place, in the burial-ground of Torre Pellice, the English Major-General Charles Beckwith, who has dedicated himself to the work of promoting the religious and intellectual progress of that poor Alpine people, who had been oppressed until 1848 by the Jesuit and clerical government, and unable of themselves alone to raise above the deplorable condition in which they were sunk. He did prodigies of charity and personal sacrifice in the Valdensian valleys—established more than a hundred schools—built churches and houses for pastors and masters—urged public instruction onward in the path which should be trodden by all citizens of a free country, and especially by Protestants—he raised the condition of the women by receiving as institution, long maintained by himself alone, the Valdensian girls, who on their return to their families carried back and imparted to them knowledge, order, and sincere piety—in a word, he consecrated 34 years of his life to protecting, benefiting, and directing to worthy ends a population who will for ever call him their regenerator and father. He took a wife from among his beloved villagers that he might be more closely united to them; and as Italy had in Cavour its most powerful promoter and supporter of unity, progress, and freedom, so Beckwith was the Cavour of the Valdensians, and his name and memory will forever be blessed among the Protestants of Piedmont. The wooden leg which supplied the place of that which he had lost at Waterloo, did not prevent him from climbing the highest Valdensian peaks, that he might personally inspect the schools he had founded. The Government bestowed upon him in 1852, the well-merited cross of St. Maurice and St Lazarus. Blessed are the dead who leave behind them imperishable monuments of brotherly love and true piety."

THE YEARS' COURAGE IN ENGLAND.—Seven millions and a-half of sovereigns and over a million of half sovereigns were coined last year. Since 1855, sixteen millions of florins, twenty-four millions of shillings and twenty millions of sixpences have passed through the Mint. During the same period forty-seven thousand silver two-penny pieces, eighty thousand silver pennies, and a large quantity of silver three halfpenny pieces, were issued, the latter for circulation in Ceylon. The coinage of half-farthings ceased in 1856, when 912,000 were struck. The total value of all the pieces coined there up to the beginning of the present year is about £64,000,000.

The Fighting Force of the Confederate States.

A writer in the Mobile Register, furnishes data from which a tolerably correct idea may be obtained of the fighting force of the Confederate States. His returns are derived from the United States census tables of 1840 and '50, and upon the assumption that the ratio of increase from 1850 to 1860, is as great as that from 1840 to 1850.

The census tables show that, in 1850, the Slave States (16) had a male white population between the ages of fifteen and fifty, as follows, in round numbers:

[illegible]	100,000
Virginia	210,000
North Carolina	125,000
South Carolina	65,000
Georgia	120,000
Florida	10,000
Alabama	100,000
Mississippi	70,000
Louisiana	90,000
Texas	40,000
Arkansas	40,000
Tennessee	170,000
Kentucky	180,000
Missouri	150 000
	1,470,000

If these States increased as rapidly between 1850 and 1860 as they did between 1840 and 1850, they have a male population between the ages of fifteen and fifty, as follows:—

Maryland	130,000
Virginia	250,000
North Carolina	165,000
South Carolina	70,000
Georgia	150,000
Florida	20,000
Alabama	130,000
Mississippi	130,000
Louisiana	145,000
Texas	80,000
Arkansas	70,000
Tenessee	200,000
Kentucky	230.000
Missouri	280,000
	2 030,000

Assuming the census tables to be correct, we now have, in the fourteen Southern States, upwards of two million of white males between the ages of fifteen and fifty, and it is idle to talk about conquering them. They are not shop-keepers, tailors, factory men, button-makers, &c., turned loose upon the world, and forced to enlist from want; but they are used to handling the shot gun and rifle from the age of 12.

Grant, however, that this estimate is extravagant. Let us suppose that the ages of eighteen and forty should govern as the limit. Still this would not reduce us to despair; for, by no rule of calculation, could our fighting forces be reduced to one million of men.

This force can be kept in the field as long as the North may assail us, and will not interfere with our producing or agricultural population. When the present crops are gathered the South will not again feel any want of food for man or horse. Insubordination among her black population, upon which the North counted so largely, does not exist; our slaves can be safely trusted to the management of the boys under eighteen and the old men, and abundant crops be thus secured while our fighting men are in the field.

Not so with the North. Whenever she puts anything like her military strength in the field, she weakens her power to feed her people; and though her white population in 1860 was 19,000,000,—against 8,700,000 whites of the South, and though, she ought therefore to be able to send out two soldiers where we can send one, yet we question much if she can send out her one million as readily as the South can.

The prolongation of this struggle will develop more of the resources of the South than of the North.

The Fordingbridge Murder.

The atrocious crime committed by George Jacob Gilbert upon Miss Marianne Susan Hall, whose parents resided at Midgham Farm, near Fordingbridge, Hampshire, was expiated, as far as human laws were concerned, at Winchester Gaol shortly after 8 o'clock yesterday morning. The dreadful atrocities perpetrated by this miscreant must be fresh to the recollection of the public, from the reports published in the press, and it must suffice here to say that Gilbert was tried at Winchester Assizes on the 13th ult., before Mr. Justice Keating, convicted, and sentenced to die, without hope of mercy. For several days after his conviction Gilbert maintained the same sullen and indifferent demeanour as to his fearful crimes, but after some little time he gradually became aware of his frightful position, although his conduct betokened passive recognition rather than contrition. He has continued such a course up to the last, although the details of his conduct were not given to the representatives of the press who applied for them. Shortly before eight o'clock Calcraft the executioner, was introduced to the cell, the Under-Sheriff, Mr. W. Brooks, Mr. H. Barber, the governor, Dr. Lyster, the surgeon, and the Rev. W. Rogers, the chaplain, having previously informed the miscreant that the time of the fatal parting with the world was at hand. The pinioning was soon done, the culprit betrayed but slight emotion, but as the prison bell tolled the fatal hour a visible change came over him. On leaving the cell he was barely able to support himself while passing through the passage to the courtyard leading to the gateway, but mounted the stairs with firmness. The appearance of the melancholy procession on the scaffold caused a slight movement on the part of the crowd assembled in front of the gaol, and the unhappy wretch cast a mournful glance on the crowd below. Calcraft's duty was quickly performed, and the drop fell with a dull heavy sound, responded to by a loud groan from the crowd. The time was much curtailed, and, after hanging the usual time, the body was cut down and buried in the gaol.

Good Habits indispensible.

In the course of the address delivered by Hon. Mr. Gladstone, on the occasion of his installation as rector of the Edinburgh University, to the students, he thus spoke of the life of faith:"

"The mountain tops of Scotland behold on every side of them the witness, and many a one of what were once her morasses and her moorlands, now blossoming as the rose, contain on its face the proof that it is in man and not in his circumstances that the secret of his destiny resides. For most of you that destiny will take its final bent toward evil or toward good, not from the information you imbibe; but from the habits of thought, and life that you shall acquire during your academical career. Could you with the bodily eye see the moments of it as they fly, you would see them all pass by you, as the bee that has rifled the heather bears its honey through the air, charged with the promise, or, it may be, with the future. In many things it is wise to believe before experience until you can know, and in order that you may know; and believe me when I tell you that thrift of time will repay you in after life with a usury of profit beyond your most sanguine dreams, and that the waste of it will make you dwindle, alike in intellectual and in moral stature, beyond your darkest reckonings.

I am Scotchman enough to know that among you there are always many who are already, even in their tender years, fighting with a mature and manly courage the battle of life. When they feel themselves lonely amidst the crowd, when they are for a moment disheartened by that difficulty which is the rude and rocking cradle of every kind of excellence, when they are conscious of the pinch of poverty and self-denial, let them be conscious, too, that a sleepless Eye is watching them from above, that their honest efforts are assisted, their humble prayers are heard, and all things are working together for their good. Is not this the life of faith, which walks by your side from your rising in the morning to your lying down at night—which lights up for you the cheerless world, and transfigures all that you encounter, whatever be its outward form, with hues brought down from heaven!—These considerations are applicable to all of you. You are all in training here for educated life, for the higher forms of mental experience, for circles of social influence and leadership. Some of you may be chosen to greater distinctions and heavier trials, and may enter into that class of which each member while he lives is envied or admired,

"And when he dies he bears a lofty name,
A light, a landmark, on the cliffs of fame."

President Lincoln's Letter to Horace Greeley.

The following is the President's reply to Mr. Greeley's editorial letter:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, August 32, 1862.

Hon. Horace Greeley:

DEAR SIR: I have just read yours of the 19th, addressed to myself through The N. Y. Tribune. If there be in it any statement or assumption of fact which I may know to be erroneous, I do not now and here controvert them. If there be in it any inferences which I may believe to be falsely drawn, I do not now and here argue against them. If there be perceptible in it an impatient and dictatorial tone, I waive it in deference to an old friend, whose heart I have always supposed to be right.

As to the policy I "seem to be pursuing," as you say, I have not meant to leave any one in doubt.

I would save the Union. I would save it the shortest way under the Constitution. The sooner the National authority can be restored, the nearer the Union will be "the Union as it was." If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time save slavery, I do not agree with them. If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time destroy slavery, I do not agree with them. My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it; and if I could do it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that. What I do about slavery and the colored race, I do because I believe it helps to save this Union; and what I forbear, I forbear because I do not believe it would help to save the Union. I shall do less whenever I shall believe what I am doing hurts the cause, and I shall do more whenever I shall believe doing more will help the cause. I shall try to correct errors when shown to be errors; and I shall adopt new views so fast as they shall appear to be true views. I have here stated my purpose according to my view of official duty, and I intend no modification of my oft-expressed personal wish that all men, everywhere, could be free.

Yours, A. LINCOLN.

A Scotch lecturer undertook to explain to a village audience the word phenomenon. "Maybe, ma freens, ye dinna ken what a phenomenon may be. Well, then a'll tell 'ee. Ye've seen a coo (cow) nae doot. Weel, a coo's nae a phenomenon. Ye've seen an apple tree. Well, an apple tree's nae a phenomenon. But gin ye see a coo gang up the apple tree tail foremost, to pu' apples, that would be a phenomenon."

IGNORANCE IN ENGLAND.—Of the women of England who have become wives in 1860, more than 60,000 have the disadvantage of being unable to write their own names; more than 18,000 even of the women of busy and acute Lancashire. In one marriage in every six in all England both men and women were unable to write. Ireland with all the ignorance attributed to her by England has never equalled that.

—It is reported that the Bishop of Kilmore is to be appointed Archbishop of Armagh.

Sons of Temperance Column.

"WE'LL HAVE ANOTHER."

BY J. MILLER.

(Written for the Canada Temperance Advocate.)

When the glass, the laugh, and the social "crack" go round the convivial table, there are few who have not heard the words,—"We'll have another!" It is an oft-repeated phrase, and it seems a simple one; yet, simple as it appears, it has a magical and fatal influence. The lover of sociality yieldeth to the friendly temptation it conveys, nor dreameth that it is a phrase which has blasted reputation—withered affection's heart—darkened the fairest prospects—ruined credit—conducted to the prison-house—and led to the grave!—Wilson's Border Tales.

I sat amidst a band of youths
Around a table laughing,
Where glasses brightly gleamed, at which
We joyously kept quaffing;
We sang, and loved each other well
As brother loves a brother,
And as each sparkling cup we drained,
We cried,—"We'll have another!"
Our hopes were fair as morning skies;
We laughed at care—still dreaming
We'd find life's journey what it seemed
In fancy's bright day-dreaming.
And "mirth and music, love and wine,"
And love's deluding daughters,
Made eyes glance bright, and hearts dance
As sunbeams on the waters. [light,
And still another goblet came,
Like morning glories shining,
And still we blessed the "generous" cup
For "hearts and hands combining!"
When, lo! four forms, all gaunt and grim,
Like children of one mother,
I saw above us whispering dread
The words,—"We'll have another!"
Their names were written on their brows—
"Dea h," "Crime," "Disease," and "Ruin,"
And now above our festive board
They darkly came a-wooing.
Death took the first—a weakly youth,
The favorite of his mother,
He bore away; and then Disease
said,—"I must have another!"
And stealthily he seized a youth,
Of all our band the strongest,
Whose bounding health and brawny arm
We deemed would bear up longest:
He fell as falls the mountain ash,
When tempests o'er it gather;
Then Ruin muttered,—"Brethren, stay,
We yet must have another!"
His victim was a dreamy youth,
Of impulse warm and bounding,
Whose dreams of life all gorgeous rose
With rainbow hues surrounding;
Nor passing shower, nor lowering gloom,
His buoyant hopes could smother;
Him Ruin seized, and mocking laughed,
"Ha! ha! we'll have another!"
Crime took a youth of generous heart,
With proud emotions beating;
Blight was the step he made at first,
But there was no retreating.
And down destruction's darksome way
Each followed fast the other,
Led on by the enchantment in
The words,—"We'll have another!"
Thus died our bliss; its brief, bright flash
Is painful to remember;
Our dreams, our hop s, our joys, its strewn
Like leaves in dark November.
Pay earnest heed ye who may read,
Wife, husband, sister, brother,
There's blasting magic in the words—
"Come, let us have another!"

An Honest Publican's Advertisement.

Friends and Neighbours, grateful for the liberal encouragement received from you, and having supplied my shop and tavern with a new and ample stock of choice Wines, Spirits, and Malt Liquors, I thankfully inform you that I continue to make drunkards, paupers, and beggars, for the sober, industrious, and respectable community to support. My liquors may excite you to riot, robbery and blood, and will certainly diminish your comforts, augment your expenses, and shorten your lives. I confidently recommend them as sure to multiply fatal accidents and distressing diseases, and likely to render these incurable. They will agreeably deprive some of life, some of reason, many of character and all of peace—will make fathers fiends, wives widows, mothers cruel, children orphans, and all poor. I will train the young to ignorance, dissipation, infidelity, lewdness, and every vice—corrupt the ministers of religion—obstruct the gospel, defile the church, and cause as much temporal and eternal death as I can.

I will thus "accomodate the public," it may be at the cost of my never-dying soul. I have a family to support—the trade pays and the public encourage it. I have a character from my Minister, and a license from the Magistrate; my traffic is lawful; Christians countenance it; and if I do not bring these evils upon you, somebody else will. I know the Bible says, "Thou shalt not kill;" pronounces a "woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink;" and enjoins me not to "put a stumbling block in a brother's way." I also read that "no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God," and I cannot expect the drunkard-maker, without repentance, to share a better late; but I wish a easy living, and have deliberately resolved to gather the wages of iniquity, and fatten on the ruin of my species. I shall therefore carry on my trade with energy, and do my best to diminish the wealth of the nation, impair the health of the people, and endanger the safety of the State. As my traffic flourishes in proportion to your ignorance and sensuality, I will do my utmost to prevent your intellectual elevation, moral purity, social happiness, and eternal welfare.

Should you doubt my ability, I refer you to the Poor-shop, the Poor-house, the Police-office, the Hospital, the Jail, and the Gallows, where so many of my customers have gone. The sight of them will satisfy you that I do what I promise.

JUDAS HEARTLESS.

N. B.—I teach old and young to drink, and change only for the moderate; a few [illegible] will be sufficient.—Starving Tracts, No. 126.

THE WORN WEDDING RING.

TO THE SISTER'S WIFE.

Your wedding ring wears thin, dear wife; ah, summers not a few,
Since I put it on your finger first, have passed o'er me and you.
And, love, what changes have we seen—what cares and pleasures, too—
Since you became my own dear wife, when this old ring was new.

Oh! blessing on that happy day, the happiest of my life,
When thanks to God, your [illegible] made you my loving wife!
Your heart will say the same, I know; that day's as dear to you,
That day that made me yours, dear wife, when this old ring was new.

How well do I remember now, your young sweet face that day;
How fair you were—now dear you were—my tongue could hardly say:
Nor how I doated on you; ah! how proud I was of you;
But did I love you more than now, when this old ring was new?

No—no; no fairer were you then than at this hour to me,
And dear as life to me this day, how could you dearer be?
As sweet your face might be that day as now it is 'tis true,
But did I know your heart as well when this old ring was new?

O partner of my gladness, wife, what care, what grief is there,
For me you would not bravely face—with me you would not share?
O what a weary wait had every day, if wanting you,
Wanting the love that God made mine when this old ring was new.

Years bring fresh links to bind us, wife—young voices that are here,
Young faces round our fire that make their mother's yet more dear,
Young loving hearts, your care each day makes yet more like to you,
More like the loving heart made mine when this old ring was new.

And bless'd be God, all he has given are with us; yet around
Our table, every little life lent to us, still is found;
Though cares we've known, with hopeful hearts the worst we've struggled through,
Blessed be his name for all His love since this old ring was new.

The past is dear: its sweetness still our memories treasure yet;
The griefs we've borne, together borne, we would not sow forget;
Whatever, wife, the future brings, heart unto heart still true,
We'll share as we have shared all else since this old ring was new.

And if God spares us 'mongst our sons and daughters to grow old,
We know his goodness will not let your heart or mine grow cold;
Your aged eyes will see in mine all they've still shown to you,
And mine in yours all they have seen since this old ring was new.

And O, when death shall come at last to bid me to my rest,
May I die looking in those eyes, and resting on that breast;
O may the parting gaze be blessed with the dear sight of you,
Of these fond eyes—fond as they were when this old ring was new.

Miscellaneous.

The Late General Beckwith.

Amedeo Bert, a Waldensian pastor, thus speaks of this noble old soldier, who has lately died at Pignerolo among the people he loved and served so well:—"Last week the Valdensians of Pignerolo and its neighbourhood accompanied to his last dwelling-place, in the burial-ground of Torre Pellice, the English Major-General Charles Beckwith, who has dedicated himself to the work of promoting the religious and intellectual progress of that poor Alpine people, who had been oppressed until 1848 by the Jesuit and clerical government, and unable of themselves alone to raise above the deplorable condition in which they were sunk. He did prodigies of charity and personal sacrifice in the Valdensian valleys—established more than a hundred schools—built churches and houses for pastors and masters—urged public instruction onward in the path which should be trodden by all citizens of a free country, and especially by Protestants—he raised the condition of the women by receiving an institution, long maintained by himself alone, the Valdensian girls who on their return to their families carried back and imparted to them knowledge, order, and sincere piety—in a word, he consecrated 34 years of his life to protecting, benefiting, and directing to worthy ends a population who will for ever call him their regenerator and father. He took a wife from among his beloved villagers that he might be more closely united to them; and as Italy had in Cavour its most powerful promoter and supporter of unity, progress, and freedom, so Beckwith was the Cavour of the Valdensians, and his name and memory will forever be blessed among the Protestants of Piedmont. The wooden leg which supplied the place of that which he had lost at Waterloo, did not prevent him from climbing the highest Valdensian peaks, that he might personally inspect the schools he had founded. The Government bestowed upon him in 1852, the well-merited cross of St. Maurice and St Lazarus. Blessed are the dead who leave behind them impressible monuments of brotherly love and true piety."

TEN YEARS' COURAGE IN ENGLAND.—Seven millions and a-half of sovereigns and over a million of half sovereigns were coined last year. Since 1855, sixteen millions of florins, twenty-four millions of shillings and twenty millions of sixpences have passed through the Mint. During the same period forty-seven thousand silver two-penny pieces, eighty thousand silver pence, and a large quantity of silver three halfpenny pieces, were issued, the latter for circulation in Ceylon. The coinage of half-farthings ceased in 1856; while 912,000 were struck. The total value of all the pieces coined there since the beginning of the present year is about £64,000,000.

The Fighting Force of the Confederate States.

A writer in the Mobile Register, for whose data from which a tolerably correct idea may be obtained of the fighting force of the Confederate States. His returns are derived from the United States census tables of 1840 and '50, and upon the assumption that the ratio of increase from 1790 to 1800, is as great as that from 1840 to 1860.

The census tables show that, in 1860, the Slave States (16) had a male white population between the ages of fifteen and fifty, as follows, in round numbers:

[illegible]	100,000
Virginia	210,000
North Carolina	125,000
South Carolina	65,000
Georgia	120,000
Florida	10,000
Alabama	100,000
Mississippi	70,000
Louisiana	90,000
Texas	40,000
Arkansas	40,000
Tennessee	170,000
Kentucky	180,000
Missouri	150,000
	1,470,000

If these States increased as rapidly between 1850 and 1860 as they did between 1840 and 1850, they have a male population between the ages of fifteen and fifty, as follows:—

Maryland	130,000
Virginia	250,000
North Carolina	145,000
South Carolina	70,000
Georgia	150,000
Florida	20,000
Alabama	130,000
Mississippi	130,000
Louisiana	145,000
Texas	80,000
Arkansas	70,000
Tenessee	200,000
Kentucky	230,000
Missouri	280,000
	2 030,000

Assuming the census tables to be correct, we now have, in the fourteen Southern States, upwards of two million of white males between the ages of fifteen and fifty, and it is idle to talk about conquering them. They are not shop-keepers, tailors, factory men, button-makers, &c., turned loose upon the world, and forced to enlist from want; but they are used to handling the shot gun and rifle from the age of 12.

Grant, however, that this estimate is extravagant. Let us suppose that the ages of eighteen and forty should govern as the limit. Still this would not reduce us to despair; for, by no rule of calculation, could our fighting forces be reduced to one million of men.

This force can be kept in the field as long as the North may assail us, and will not interfere with our producing or agricultural population. When the present crops are gathered the South will not again feel any want of food for man or horse. Insubordination among her black population, upon which the North counted so largely, does not exist; our slaves can be safely trusted to the management of the boys under eighteen and the old men, and abundant crops be thus secured while our fighting men are in the field.

Not so with the North. Whenever she puts anything like her military strength in the field, she weakens her power to feed her people; and though her white population in 1860 was 19,000,000,—against 8,700,000 whites of the South, and though, she ought therefore to be able to send out two soldiers where we can send one, yet we question much if she can send out her one million as readily as the South can.

The prolongation of this struggle will develop more of the resources of the South than of the North.

The Fordingbridge Murder.

The atrocious crime committed by George Jacob Gilbert upon Miss Marianne Susan Hall, whose parents resided at Midgham Farm, near Fordingbridge, Hampshire, was expiated, as far as human laws were concerned, at Winchester Gaol shortly after 8 o'clock yesterday morning. The dreadful atrocities perpetrated by this miscreant must be fresh to the recollection of the public, from the reports published in the press, and it must suffice here to say that Gilbert was tried at Winchester Assizes on the 13th ult., before Mr. Justice Keating, convicted, and sentenced to die, without hope of mercy. For several days after his conviction Gilbert maintained the same stolid and indifferent demeanour as to his fearful crimes, but after some little time he gradually became aware of his frightful position, although his conduct betokened passive recognition rather than contrition. He has continued such a course up to the last, although the details of his conduct were not given to the representatives of the press who applied for them. Shortly before eight o'clock Calcraft the executioner, was introduced to the cell, the Under-Sheriff, Mr. W. Brooks, Mr. H. Barber, the governor, Dr. Lyford, the surgeon, and the Rev. W. Rogers, the chaplain, having previously informed the miscreant that the time of his fatal parting with the world was at hand. The pinioning was soon done, the culprit betrayed but slight emotion, but as the prison bell tolled the fatal hour a visible change came over him. On leaving the cell he was barely able to support himself while passing through the passage to the courtyard leading to the gateway, but mounted the stairs with firmness. The appearance of the melancholy procession on the scaffold caused a slight movement on the portion of the crowd assembled in front of the gaol, and the unhappy wretch cast a mournful glance on the crowed below. Calcraft's duty was quickly performed, and the drop fell with a dull heavy sound, responded to by a loud groan from the crowd. The time was much convulsed; and, after hanging the usual time, the body was cut down and buried in the gaol.

Good Habits indispensible.

In the course of the address delivered by Hon. Mr. Gladstone, on the occasion of his installation as rector of the Edinburgh University, to the students, he thus spoke of "the life of faith:"

"The mountain tops of Scotland behold on every side of them the witness, and many a cool of what were once her morasses and her moorlands, now blossoming as the rose, conspire on its face the proof that it is in man and not in his circumstances that the secret of his destiny resides. For most of you that destiny will take its final bent toward evil or toward good, not from the information you imbibe; but from the habits of thought, and life that you shall acquire during your academical career. Could you with the bodily eye see the moments of it as they fly, you would see them all pass by you, as the bee that has rifled the heather bears its honey through the air, charged with the promise, or, it may be, with the future. In many things it is wise to believe before experience until you can know, and in order that you may know; and believe me when I tell you that thrift of time will repay you in after life with a usury of profit beyond your most sanguine dreams, and that the waste of it will make you dwindle, alike in intellectual and in moral stature, beyond your darkest reckonings.

I am Scotchman enough to know that among you there are always many who are already, even in their tender years, fighting with a mature and manly courage the battle of life. When they feel themselves lonely amidst the crowd, when they are for a moment disheartened by that difficulty which is the rude and rocking cradle of every kind of excellence, when they are conscious of the pinch of poverty and self-denial, let them be conscious, too, that a sleepless Eye is watching them from above, that their honest efforts are assisted, their humble prayers are heard, and all things are working together for their good. Is not this the life of faith which walks by your side from your rising in the morning to your lying down at night—which lights up for you the cheerless world, and transfigures all that you encounter, whatever be its outward form, with hues brought down from heaven!—These considerations are applicable to all of you. You are all in training here for educated life, for the higher forms of mental experience, for circles of social influence and leadership. Some of you may be chosen to greater distinctions and heavier trials, and may enter into that class of which each member while he lives is envied or admired,

"And when he dies he bears a lofty name,
A light, a landmark, on the cliffs of fame."

President Lincoln's Letter to Horace Greeley.

The following is the President's reply to Mr. Greeley's editorial letter:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, August 32, 1862.

Hon. Horace Greeley:

DEAR SIR: I have just read yours of the 19th, addressed to myself through The N. Y. Tribune. If there be in it any statement or assumption of fact which I may know to be erroneous, I do not now and here controvert them. If there be in it any inferences which I may believe to be falsely drawn, I do not now and here argue against them. If there be perceptible in it an impatient and dictatorial tone, I waive it in deference to an old friend, whose heart I have always supposed to be right.

As to the policy I "seem to be pursuing," as you say, I have not meant to leave any one in doubt.

I would save the Union. I would save it the shortest way under the Constitution. The sooner the National authority can be restored, the nearer the Union will be "the Union as it was." If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time save slavery, I do not agree with them. If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time destroy slavery, I do not agree with them. My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it; and if I could do it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that. What I do about slavery and the colored race, I do because I believe it helps to save this Union; and what I forbear, I forbear because I do not believe it would help to save the Union. I shall do less whenever I shall believe what I am doing hurts the cause, and I shall do more whenever I shall believe doing more will help the cause. I shall try to correct errors when shown to be errors; and I shall adopt new views so fast as they shall appear to be true views. I have here stated my purpose according to my view of official duty, and I intend no modification of my oft-expressed personal wish that all men, everywhere, could be free.

Yours, A. LINCOLN.

A Scotch lecturer undertook to explain to a village audience the word phenomenon. "Maybe, ma freens, ye dinna ken what a phenomenon may be. Well, then a'll tell 'oo. Ye've seen a coo (cow) nae doot. Weel, a coo's nae a phenomenon. Ye've seen an apple tree. Well, an apple tree's nae a phenomenon. But gin ye see a coo gang up the apple tree tail foremost, to pu' apples, that would be a phenomenon."

IGNORANCE IN ENGLAND.—Of the women of England who have become wives in 1860, more than 60,000 have the disadvantage of being unable to write their own names; more than 18,000 even of the women of lowly and acute Lancashire. In one marriages in every six in all England both man and woman were unable to write. Ireland with all the ignorance attributed to her by England's tongue-tied orators, is not at that.

—It is rumored that the Bishop of Kildare is to be appointed Archbishop of Armagh.

Sons of Temperance Column.

"WE'LL HAVE ANOTHER."

BY J. MILLER.

(Written for the Canada Temperance Advocate.)

When the glee, the laugh, and the social "crack" go round the convivial table, there are few who have not heard the words,—"We'll have another!" It is an oft-repeated phrase, and it seems a simple one; yet, simple as it appears, it has a magical and fatal influence. The lover of sociality yieldeth to the friendly temptation it conveys, nor dreameth that it is a phrase which has blasted reputation—withered affection's heart—darkened the fairest prospects—ruined credit—conducted to the prison-house—and led to the grave!—Wilson's Border Tales.

I sat amidst a band of youths
Around a table laughing,
Where glasses brightly gleamed, at which
We joyously kept quaffing;
We sang, and loved each other well
As brother loves a brother,
And as each sparkling cup we drained,
We cried,—"We'll have another?"
Our hopes were fair as morning skies;
We laughed at care—still deeming
We'd find life's journey what it seemed
In fancy's bright day-dreaming.
And "mirth and music, love and wine,"
And Eve's deluding daughters,
Made eyes glance bright, and hearts dance
As sunbeams on the waters. [light,
And still another bottle came,
Like morning glories shining,
And still we blessed the "generous" cup
For "hearts and hands combining!"
When, lo! four forms, all gaunt and grim,
Like children of one mother,
I saw above us whispering dread
The words,—"We'll have another!"
Their names were written on their brows—
"Dyah, h," "Crime," "Disease," and "Ruin,"
And now above our festive board
They darkly came a-wooing.
Death took the first—a weakly youth,
The favorite of his mother,
He bore away; and then Disease
Said,—"I must have another!"
And stealthily he seized a youth,
Of all our band the strongest,
Whom bounding health and bowing arm
We deemed would bear up longest:
He fell as falls the mountain ash,
When tempests o'er it gather;
Then Ruin muttered,—"Brethren, stay,
We yet must have another!"
His victim was a dreamy youth,
Of impulse warm and bounding,
Whose dreams of life all gorgeous rose
With rainbow hues surrounding;
Nor passing shower, nor lowering gloom,
His buoyant hopes could smother;
Him Ruin seized, and mocking laughed,
"Ha! ha! we'll have another!"
Crime took a youth of generous heart,
With proud emotions beating;
Slight was the step he made at first,
But there was no retreating.
And as the destruction's darks came way
Each followed fast the other,
Led on by the enchantment in
The words,—"We'll have another!"
Thus died our bliss; its brief, bright flash
Is painful to remember;
Our dreams, our hop s, our joys, the crown
Like leaves in dark November.
Pay earnest heed ye who may read,
Wife, husband, sister, brother,
There's blasting magic in the words—
"Come, let us have another!"

An Honest Publican's Advertisement.

Friends and Neighbours, grateful for the liberal encouragement received from you, and having supplied my shop and tavern with a new and ample stock of choice Wines, Spirits, and Malt Liquors, I thankfully inform you that I continue to make drunkards, paupers, and beggars, for the sober, industrious, and respectable community to support. My liquors may excite you to riot, robbery and blood, and will certainly diminish your comforts, augment your expenses, and shorten your lives. I confidently recommend them as sure to multiply fatal accidents and distressing diseases, and likely to render these incurable. They will agreeably deprive some of life, some of reason, many of character and all of peace—will make fathers fiends, wives widows, mothers cruel, children orphans, and all poor. I will train the young to ignorance, dissipation, infidelity, lewdness, and every vice—corrupt the ministers of religion—obstruct the gospel, defile the church, and cause as much temporal and eternal death as I can.

I will thus "accomodate the public," it may be at the cost of my never-dying soul. I have a family to support—the trade pays and the public encourage it. I have a character from my Minister, and a license from the Magistrate; my traffic is lawful; Christians countenance it; and if I do not bring these evils upon you, somebody else will. I know the Bible says, "Thou shalt not kill;" pronounces a "woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink;" and enjoins us not to "put a stumbling block in a brother's way." I also read that "no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God," and I cannot expect the drunkard-maker, without repentance, to share a better fate; but I wish a lazy living, and have deliberately resolved to gather the wages of iniquity, and fatten on the ruin of my species. I shall therefore carry on my trade with energy, and do my best to diminish the wealth of the nation, impair the health of the people, and endanger the safety of the State. As my traffic flourishes in proportion to your ignorance and sensuality, I will do my utmost to prevent your intellectual elevation, moral purity, social happiness, and eternal welfare.

Should you doubt my ability, I refer you to the Pawn-shop, the Poor-house, the Police-office, the Hospital, the Jail, and the Gallows, where so many of my customers have gone. The sight of these will satisfy you that I do what I promise.

JUBAL HEATHENS.

N. B.—I shall teach old and young to drink, and charge only for the materials; a few lessons will be sufficient.—Sons of Temperance Tracts, No. 126.

THE WORN WEDDING RING.

TO THE MARRIED WIFE.

Your wedding ring wears thin, dear wife; ah, summers not a few,
Since I put it on your finger first, have passed o'er me and you.
And, love, what changes have we seen—what cares and pleasures, too—
Since you became my own dear wife, when this old ring was new.

Oh! blessing on that happy day, the happiest of my life,
When thanks to God, your low "Yes" made you my loving wife;
Your heart will say the same, I know; that day's as dear to you,
That day that made me yours, dear wife, when this old ring was new.

How well do I remember now, your young sweet face that day;
How fair you were—now dear you were—my tongue could hardly say:
Nor how I doated on you; ah! how proud I was of you;
But did I love you more than now, when this old ring was new?

No—no; no fairer were you then than at this hour to me,
And dear as life to me this day, how could you dearer be?
As sweet your face might be that day as now it is 'tis true,
But did I know your heart as well when this old ring was new?

O partner of my gladness, wife, what care, what grief is there,
For me you would not bravely face—with me you would not share?
O what a weary want had every day, if wanting you,
Wanting the love that God made mine when this old ring was new.

Years bring fresh links to bind us, wife—young voices that are here,
Young faces round our fire that make their mother's yet more dear,
Young loving hearts, your care each day makes yet more like to you,
More like the loving heart made mine when this old ring was new.

And bless'd be God, all he has given are with us; yet around
Our table, every little life lent to us, still is found;
Though cares we've known, with hopeful hearts the worst we've struggled through,
Blessed be His name for all His love since this old ring was new.

The past is dear: its sweetness still our memories treasure yet;
The griefs we've borne, together borne, we would not now forget;
Whatever, wife, the future brings, heart unto heart still true,
We'll share as we have shared all else since this old ring was new.

And if God spares us 'mongst our sons and daughters to grow old,
We know his goodness will not let your heart or mine grow cold;
Your aged eyes will see in mine all they've still shown to you,
And mine in yours all they have seen since this old ring was new.

And O, when death shall come at last to bid me to my rest,
May I die looking in those eyes, and resting on that breast;
O may the parting gaze be blessed with the dear sight of you,
Of those fond eyes—fond as they were when this old ring was new.

Miscellaneous.

The Late General Beckwith.

Amedeo Bert, a Waldensian pastor, thus speaks of this noble old soldier, who has lately died at Pignerolo among the people he loved and served so well:—"Last week the Valdensians of Pignerolo and its neighbourhood accompanied to his last dwelling-place, in the burial-ground of Torre Pellice, the English Major-General Charles Beckwith, who had dedicated himself to the work of promoting the religious and intellectual progress of that poor Alpine people, who had been oppressed until 1848 by the Jesuit and clerical government, and unable of themselves alone to raise above the deplorable condition in which they were sunk. He did prodigies of charity and personal sacrifice in the Valdensian valleys—established more than a hundred schools—built churches and houses for pastors and masters—urged public instruction onward in the path which should be trodden by all citizens of a free country, and especially by Protestants—he raised the condition of the women by receiving an institution, long maintained by himself alone, the Valdensian girls, who on their return to their families carried back and imparted to them knowledge, order, and sincere piety—in a word, he consecrated 34 years of his life to protecting, benefiting, and directing to worthy ends a population who will for ever call him their regenerator and father. He took a wife from among his beloved villagers that he might be more closely united to them; and as Italy had in Cavour its most powerful promoter and supporter of unity, progress, and freedom, so Beckwith was the Cavour of the Valdensians, and his name and memory will forever be blessed among the Protestants of Piedmont. The wooden leg which supplied the place of that which he had lost at Waterloo, did not prevent him from climbing the highest Valdensian peaks, that he might personally inspect the schools he had founded. The Government bestowed upon him in 1852, the well-merited cross of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus. Blessed are the dead who leave behind them imperishable monuments of brotherly love and true piety."

THE YEARS' COURAGE IN ENGLAND.—Seven millions and a-half of sovereigns and over a million of half sovereigns were coined last year. Some 1855, sixteen millions of florins, twenty-four millions of shillings and twenty millions of sixpences have passed through the Mint. During the same period forty-seven thousand silver two-penny pieces, eighty thousand silver pence, and a large quantity of silver three halfpenny pieces, were issued, the latter for circulation in Ceylon. The shortage of half-farthings amounts to 1856; when 672,000 were issued. The total value of all the pieces coined there prior to the beginning of the present year is about £94,000,000.

The Fighting Force of the Confederate States.

A writer in the Mobile Register, furnishes data from which a tolerably correct idea may be obtained of the fighting force of the Confederate States. His figures are derived from the United States census tables of 1840 and '50, and upon the assumption that the ratio of increase from 1850 to 1860, is as great as that from 1840 to 1850.

The census tables show that, in 1850, the Slave States (15) had a male white population between the ages of fifteen and fifty, as follows, in round numbers:

[illegible]	100,000
Virginia	210,000
North Carolina	125,000
South Carolina	65,000
Georgia	120,000
Florida	10,000
Alabama	100,000
Mississippi	70,000
Louisiana	90,000
Texas	40,000
Arkansas	40,000
Tennessee	170,000
Kentucky	190,000
Missouri	150,000
	1,470,000

If these States increased as rapidly between 1850 and 1860 as they did between 1840 and 1850, they have a male population between the ages of fifteen and fifty, as follows:—

Maryland	130,000
Virginia	250,000
North Carolina	145,000
South Carolina	70,000
Georgia	150,000
Florida	20,000
Alabama	130,000
Mississippi	130,000
Louisiana	145,000
Texas	80,000
Arkansas	70,000
Tenessee	200,000
Kentucky	230,000
Missouri	280,000
	2 030,000

Assuming the census tables to be correct, we now have, in the fourteen Southern States, upwards of two million of white males between the ages of fifteen and fifty, and it is idle to talk about conquering them. They are not shop-keepers, tailors, factory men, button-makers, &c., turned loose upon the world, and forced to enlist from want; but they are used to handling the shot gun and rifle from the age of 12.

Grant, however, that this estimate is extravagant. Let us suppose that the ages of eighteen and forty should govern as the limit. Still this would not reduce us to despair; for, by no rule of calculation, could our fighting forces be reduced to one million of men.

This force can be kept in the field as long as the North may assail us, and will not interfere with our producing or agricultural population. When the present crops are gathered the South will not again feel any want of food for man or horse. Insubordination among her black population, upon which the North counted so largely, does not exist; our slaves can be safely trusted to the management of the boys under eighteen and the old men, and abundant crops be thus secured while our fighting men are in the field.

Not so with the North. Whenever she puts anything like her military strength in the field, she weakens her power to feed her people; and though her white population in 1860 was 19,000,000,—against 8,700,000 whites of the South, and though, she ought therefore to be able to send out two soldiers where we can send one, yet we question much if she can send out her one million as readily as the South can.

The prolongation of this struggle will develop more of the resources of the South than of the North.

The Fordingbridge Murder.

The atrocious crime committed by George Jacob Gilbert upon Miss Marianne Susan Hall, whose parents resided at Midgham Farm, near Fordingbridge, Hampshire, was expiated, as far as human laws were concerned, at Winchester Gaol shortly after 8 o'clock yesterday morning. The dreadful atrocities perpetrated by this miscreant must be fresh to the recollection of the public, from the reports published in the press, and it must suffice here to say that Gilbert was tried at Winchester Assizes on the 13th ult., before Mr. Justice Keating, convicted, and sentenced to die, without hope of mercy. For several days after his conviction Gilbert maintained the same stolid and indifferent demeanour as to his fearful crimes, but after some little time he gradually became aware of his frightful position, although his conduct betokened passive recognition rather than contrition. He has continued such a course up to the last, although the details of his conduct were not given to the representatives of the press who applied for them. Shortly before eight o'clock Calcraft the executioner, was introduced to the cell, the Under-Sheriff, Mr. W. Brooks, Mr. H. Barker, the governor, Dr. Lyle, the surgeon, and the Rev. W. Rogers, the chaplain, having previously informed the miscreant that the time of the fatal parting with the world was at hand. The pinioning was soon done, the culprit betrayed but slight emotion, but as the prison bell tolled the fatal hour a visible change came over him. On leaving the cell he was barely able to support himself while passing through the passage to the courtyard leading to the gateway, but ascended the stairs with firmness. The appearance of the instantaneity proceeded on the scaffold caused a slight derangement on the part of the crowd assembled in front of the gaol, and the unhappy wretch cast a mournful glance on the crowd below. Calcraft's busy and quickly performed, and the drop fell with a dull heavy sound, succeeded by a hoarse groan from the crowd. The time was much protracted, and, after hanging the usual time, the body was cut down and buried in the gaol.

Good Habits indispensible.

In the course of the address delivered by Hon. Mr. Gladstone, on the occasion of his installation as rector of the Edinburgh University, to the students, he thus spoke of the life of faith:"

"The mountain tops of Scotland behold on every side of them the wither s, and many a one of what were once her morasses and her moorlands, now blossoming as the rose, receives on its face the proof that it is in man and not in his circumstances that the secret of his destiny resides. For most of you that destiny will take its final bent toward evil or toward good, not from the information you imbibe; but from the habits of thought, and life that you shall acquire during your academical career. Could you with the bodily eye see the moments of it as they fly, you would see them all pass by you, as the bee that has rifled the heather bears its honey through the air, charged with the promise, or, it may be, with the future. In many things it is wise to believe before experience until you can know, and in order that you may know; and believe me when I tell you that thrift of time will repay you in after life with a usury of profit beyond your most sanguine dreams, and that the waste of it will make you dwindle, alike in intellectual and in moral stature, beyond your darkest reckonings.

I am Scotchman enough to know that among you there are always many who are already, even in their tender years, fighting with a mature and manly courage the battle of life. When they feel themselves lonely amidst the crowd, when they are for a moment disheartened by that difficulty which is the rude and rocking cradle of every kind of excellence, when they are conscious of the pinch of poverty and self-denial, let them be conscious, too, that a sleepless Eye is watching them from above, that their honest efforts are assisted, their humble prayers are heard, and all things are working together for their good. Is not this the life of faith, which walks by your side from your rising in the morning to your lying down at night—which lights up for you the cheerless world, and transfigures all that you encounter, whatever be its outward form, with hues brought down from heaven!—These considerations are applicable to all of you. You are all in training here for educated life, for the higher forms of mental experience, for circles of social influence and leadership. Some of you may be chosen to greater distinctions and heavier trials, and may enter into that class of which each member while he lives is envied or admired,

"And when he dies he bears a lofty name,
A light, a landmark, on the cliffs of fame."

President Lincoln's Letter to Horace Greeley.

The following is the President's reply to Mr. Greeley's editorial letter:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, August 22, 1862.

Hon. Horace Greeley:

DEAR SIR: I have just read yours of the 19th, addressed to myself through The N. Y. Tribune. If there be in it any statement or assumption of fact which I may know to be erroneous, I do not now and here controvert them. If there be in it any inferences which I may believe to be falsely drawn, I do not now and here argue against them. If there be perceptible in it an impatient and dictatorial tone, I waive it in deference to an old friend, whose heart I have always supposed to be right.

As to the policy I "seem to be pursuing," as you say, I have not meant to leave any one in doubt.

I would save the Union. I would save it the shortest way under the Constitution. The sooner the National authority can be restored, the nearer the Union will be "the Union as it was." If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time save slavery, I do not agree with them. If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time destroy slavery, I do not agree with them. My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it; and if I could do it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that. What I do about slavery and the colored race, I do because I believe it helps to save this Union; and what I forbear, I forbear because I do not believe it would help to save the Union. I shall do less whenever I shall believe what I am doing hurts the cause, and I shall do more whenever I shall believe doing more will help the cause. I shall try to correct errors when shown to be errors; and I shall adopt new views so fast as they shall appear to be true views. I have here stated my purpose according to my view of official duty, and I intend no modification of my oft-expressed personal wish that all men, everywhere, could be free.

Yours, A. LINCOLN.

A Scotch lecturer undertook to explain to a village audience the word phenomenon. "Maybe, ma friends, ye dinna ken what a phenomenon may be. Well, then a'll tell 'oo. Ye've seen a coo (cow) mae dout. Weel, a coo's nae a phenomenon. Ye've seen an apple tree. Well, an apple tree's nae a phenomenon. But gin ye see a coo gang up the apple tree tail foremost, to pu' apples, that would be a phenomenon."

IGNORANCE IN ENGLAND.—Of the women of England who have become wives in 1860, more than 50,000 have the disadvantage of being unable to write their own names; more than 18,000 even of the women of busy and astute Lancashire. In one marriage in every six in all England both man and woman were unable to write. Ireland with all the ignorance attributed to her by England 6th never equalled that.

—It is reported that the Bishop of Kilmore is to be appointed Archbishop of Armagh.

Sons of Temperance Column.

"WE'LL HAVE ANOTHER."

BY J. MILLER.

(Written for the Canada Temperance Advocate.)

When the glass, the laugh, and the social "crack" go round the convivial table, there are few who have not heard the words,—"We'll have another!" It is an oft-repeated phrase, and it seems so simple one; yet, simple as it appears, it has a magical and fatal influence. The lover of sociality yieldeth to the friendly temptation it conveys, nor dreameth that it is a phrase which has blasted reputation—withered affection's heart—darkened the fairest prospects—ruined credit—conducted to the prison-house—and led to the grave!—Wilson's Border Tales.

I sat amidst a band of youths
Around a table laughing,
Where glasses brightly gleamed, at which
We joyously kept quaffing;
We sang, and loved each other well
As brother loves a brother,
And as each sparkling cup we drained,
We cried,—"We'll have another!"
Our hopes were fair as morning skies;
We laughed at care—still deeming
We'd find life's journey what it seemed
In fancy's bright day-dreaming,
And "mirth and music, love and wine,"
And Eve's deluding daughters,
Made eyes glance bright, and hearts dance
As sunbeams on the waters. [light,
And still another goblet came,
Like morning glories shining,
And still we blessed the "generous cup"
For "hearts and hands combining!"
When, lo! four forms, all gaunt and grim,
Like children of one mother,
I saw above us whispering dread
The words,—"We'll have another!"
Their names were written on their brows—
"Dan ii," "Crime," "Disease," and "Ruin,"
And over above our festive board
They darkly came a-wooing.
Death took the first—a wealthy youth,
The favorite of his mother,
He bore away; and then Disease
Said,—"I must have another!"
And stealthily he seized a youth,
Of all our band the strongest,
Whose bounding health and brawny arm
We deemed would bear up longest:
He fell as falls the mountain ash,
When tempests o'er it gather;
Then Ruin muttered,—"Heathren, stay,
We yet must have another!"
His victim was a dreamy youth,
Of impulse warm and bounding,
Whose dreams of life all gorgeous rose
With rainbow hues surrounding;
No passing shower, nor lowering gloom,
His buoyant hopes could smother;
Him Ruin seized, and mocking laughed,
"Ha! ha! we'll have another!"
Crime took a youth of generous heart,
With proud emotions beating;
Slight was the step he made at first,
But there was no retreating.
And down destruction's darksome way
Each followed fast the other,
Led on by the enchantment in
The words,—"We'll have another!"
Thus died our mates; in brief, bright flash
Is painful to remember;
Our dreams, our hop s, our joys, the crown
Like leaves in dark November.
Pay earnest heed ye who may read,
Wife, husband, sister, brother,
There's blasting magic in the words—
"Come, let us have another!"

An Honest Publican's Advertisement.

Friends and Neighbours, grateful for the liberal encouragement received from you, and having supplied my shop and tavern with a new and ample stock of choice Wines, Spirits, and Malt Liquors, I thankfully inform you that I continue to make drunkards, paupers, and beggars, for the sober, industrious, and respectable community to support. My liquors may excite you to riot, robbery and blood, and will certainly diminish your comforts, augment your expenses, and shorten your lives. I confidently recommend them as sure to multiply fatal accidents and distressing diseases, and likely to render these incurable. They will agreeably deprive some of life, some of reason, many of character and all of peace—will make fathers fiends, wives widows, mothers cruel, children orphans, and all poor. I will train the young to ignorance, dissipation, infidelity, lewdness, and every vice—corrupt the ministers of religion—obstruct the gospel, defile the church, and cause as much temporal and eternal death as I can.

I will thus "accomodate the public," it may be at the cost of my never-dying soul. I have a family to support—the trade pays and the public encourage it. I have a character from my Minister, and a license from the Magistrate; my traffic is lawful; Christians countenance it; and if I do not bring these evils upon you, somebody else will. I know the Bible says, "Thou shalt not kill;" pronounces a "woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink;" and enjoins me not to "put a stumbling block in a brother's way." I also read that "no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God," and I cannot expect the drunkard-maker, without repentance, to share it better late; but I wish a easy living, and have deliberately resolved to gather the wages of iniquity, and fatten on the ruin of my species. I shall therefore carry on my trade with energy, and do my best to diminish the wealth of the nation, impair the health of the people, and endanger the safety of the State. As my traffic flourishes in proportion to your ignorance and sensuality, I will do my utmost to prevent your intellectual elevation, moral purity, social happiness, and eternal welfare.

Should you doubt my ability, I refer you to the Penn-shop, the Poor-house, the Police-office, the Hospital, the Jail, and the Gallows, where so many of my customers have gone. The sight of these will satisfy you that I do what I promise.

Dr. Livingstone's Expedition

Dr. Livingstone, the distinguished African missionary, has written a letter to a clergyman of Cambridge, dated on board her Majesty's ship Pioneer, in the River Shire, January 2. It will be seen that a slavery question in Africa is one intently a source of bitter affliction to the people.—The extracts from the letter which we have give, afford interesting glimpses into African life, habits, and the pursuits of the people:

It was very annoying to find that the people of Tette had come along the path followed by Dr. Kirk, along the Shire to that village, and set up an extended system of slave hunting in the very country to which the mission had come. A tribe called Ajawa had been employed to attack the Manganja villages, kill the men, and sell the women and children to the Portuguese for a mere trifle in calico. Four parts, with about 140 captives, fell into our hands, and were handed over to the bishop as a beginning to his flock. They were chiefly women and children.

You cannot conceive the state of division among the Manganja (in mercy call them Man-anja, not as we sometimes hear it, Mang-anja;) the destruction of village after village produced no effort at union against the common foe. A message only was sent down to Chibisa, as he is believed to possess medicine capable of insuring victory. The paramount chief, instead of aiding his subjects, kindly helped the slave-hunters across the Shire. We found that the whole nation were fleeing, and hoping to stop this and the effusion of blood, went to hold a parley with the Ajawa. Unfortunately, we came to them when in the act of storming three villages. The bishop then offered up a fervent prayer, and with the accent of that prayer we could distinctly hear the wail for the dead, and the shrill scream for victory. As we advanced to their villages our assurances that we came peaceably were mullified by some Manganja followers calling out, "Our Chibisa has come;" and very unfortunately, though I heard it indistinctly, it did not strike the mind at first towards that we were thereby deprived of the protection of our English name. We were attacked on all sides with poisoned arrows and four muskets, and I feel very sure that the latter were handled by Portuguese slaves. They certainly had the dress common among slaves at Tette, and there was a square house, such as slaves often build near the Ajawa villages. We retired slowly from the village, but this only made them bolder; they came within fifty yards of us, and it was only by a recourse to our fire-arms that we avoided all becoming food for the vultures. I am sorry that it was necessary, for it was the first hostile encounter I have had in Africa. Slavery is the parent of every other vice. Life is of no value in the trader's eye. A short time before we caught the first slave-hunting party, they shot two women on pretence that they were trying to loose the thongs with which they were bound.

Leaving the mission ceries at a spot which to the eye looks as if fifteen miles south of Mount Zomba, and which will serve till a better locality is selected, we returned to the ship, and in the beginning of August carried a boat past Murchison's Cataracts. When we launched her on the Upper Shire we were virtually on the lake, though still sixty miles distant, because the river was all smooth and deep, and has a gentle current. It is surrounded with mountains, and from them rush down furious tempests with great suddenness. Tremendous swells get up in fifteen or twenty minutes, and had you ever crossed the bar at Quilimane you would know what I mean when I say that terrific rollers came across the lake with wall-like sides and hairy heads, breaking in from seven to fourteen fathoms. We were once caught a mile from the shore, and could neither advance nor recede for sixty weary hours. The men, all dreadfully seasick, did not care how soon they went down, as they "were dead already." The rollers broke either before they reached or after they had passed our anchorage. The boat behaved admirably, mounting up the steep billows like a sea bird, but one roller breaking on her would have ended our exploration. We sailed along the western shore, and found that side to be a succession of bays. The southern end is shaped somewhat like Italy on the map. The ankle of the boot is the narrowest part, 18 or 20 miles wide. It expands towards the north to 35, then to 50 or 60 miles. The length is over 200 miles, probably 225. The depth is very great. A fishing line found bottom in a bay at 100 fathoms or 600 feet; but a mile outside none was felt at 116 fathoms, or 696 feet. There are several small rounded rocky islands in this lake which are covered with forests, uninhabited and used only as fishing stations. Detached rocks jut out adjacent to these islands, and to all the rocky headlands, which will be dangerous to navigators. With our present knowledge a ship could find anchorage only near the shore. Fish abound, and a prodigious population inhabits the shores, and they catch fish by large nets, creels hooks, torches, or poison. Alligators, very well fed on fish, seldom or never molest man, so we could bathe in the delicious cool waters wherever we chose—a great luxury not to be enjoyed in the Shire of the Zambesi.

The people were civil—no dues were levied or fines demanded; but slaving is the only trade. Colonel Rigby, our Consul at Zanzibar, says, in a letter to Sir George Grey, that 19,000 slaves pass through the custom house there annually—all, or nearly all, from Nyassa or Shire; and he adds, "If it should ever be possible to place a steamer on Lake Nyassa it will cut off the chief supply of slaves to the east coast." Without knowing that gentleman's opinion we have ordered a steamer from Glasgow, in twenty-four parts, which we hope to carry past the Cataracts as our next work. We expect her soon, and I shall not pen a syllable to you or any one else until it is accomplished.

A tribe of Zulus, originally from the south, had made terrible havoc among the Lake people. We don't know why, as we received only one-sided statements, and never form an opinion on that sort of evidence; but human skeletons and putrid bodies of the slain strewed the shore—"man's inhumanity makes countless thousands mourn." I met seven of these, Mbarie or Bulus; they behaved much as we may suppose old women of either sex would do if they fancied they had seen a ghost. In view of this tribe going so far, it strikes me that the more ready Christian people attempt the more their Master gives them to perform. The bishop at the Cape, with his Kaffir college, is probably fitting missionaries to labor much nearer the equator than he ever contemplated.

I hear that the Free Church of Scotland contemplates a mission out here, and the United Free Methodists are sending another station under Dr. Kraef to the east coast. There is room for all, and for more than will ever come.

Murray, Dickenson, and Clarke came up the Shire in one canoe country canoes, with the housing a work of the language or a yard of the way. Murray came first. In the middle of the evening of the 13th Nov. I observed a canoe struggling down a spirit of the place. Unfortunately. Some English words made me prick up my ears, and I said "Pull to the port side." "What side is that?" responded Murray. A capital fellow is he.

THURSDAY SEPTEMBER 11, 1862.

THE DEPUTY ADJUTANT GENERALSHIP.

There has been a very general discussion through the press upon the recent act of the Government in the appointment of Mr. William Walker Powell to the office of Deputy Adjutant General of Militia for Upper Canada. The general opinion expressed is that the Government have acted unwisely in the appointment, on the score that the nominee is not a military man. No exception has been taken to his business talent, to his trustworthiness or character, but simply that in the position in which he is placed, he is the "wrong man in the wrong place," especially at the present portentious period of our history. With a civil war raging across our border, a prospect ere long of an immense army, released from the duties of war, being turned adrift, it is not deemed chimerral to imagine that some chivalrous spirit may lead these hordes into our country, and in view of the severe rebukes and criminations by the British Parliament and Press,—on our supposed apathy, and of the possibility of a war with the United States it is considered unaccountable that we should be so remiss, so indifferent, to measures for our own safety as the defeat of the Militia Bill of the late Government seemed to imply. In the face of all these serious considerations the objectors consider the Government deserving of censure in appointing a civilian to the highest position in the Militia, and their conduct is characterised as shocking the sense of the country, and if not perpetrating a job of the worst kind, certainly committing a grave blunder. We observe two papers justify the appointment—the Quebec Mercury and the Cornwall Freeholder—on the ground that the office does not require a Military knowledge. The latter paper in criticising a letter wrote by Colonel Haultain to the Globe, says the Colonel seems led away by the term General, as have Inspector General, and Receiver General, and argues as if General when applied to the Militia, means no more than it does when applied to those departments. It is a pity that the Journal stopped here; it should have mentioned the Attorney General and the Solicitor General, and then it would have shown the affair in its true light. Who would advocate the appointment of a merchant—a mere business man, be he ever so clever and honest, yet wanting knowledge of the Law—to either of the offices? Do not the very designations imply a knowledge of law? And, in like manner, does not the designation of Deputy Adjutant General imply a knowledge of Military matters? When the late incumbent was appointed, if we mistake not, there was a general expression of disapprobation by the opposition on the score of want of Military knowledge. Most of the Ministerial organs however justified the appointment—as they did almost every act of that Government, be it bad or good,—now these very papers discover that a Military knowledge is indispensable in the office, and find serious fault with this Government for doing precisely as their predecessors did—"circumstances alter cases."

There is no concealing the fact that the Government is not supported by the country in this appointment. We are willing however to credit them with honesty of intention in the act, but it is not popular, and if they can the sooner they mend their blunder the better.

A lesson can be learned from our neighbours of the very serious consequences where a deficiency of knowledge in military matters exists at the heads of departments. The War officer and the office of Commissioner in Chief have been changed and changed, and yet they have not found the right men; and perhaps we have not a greater proof of the want of Military knowledge in our Commander in Chief and Minister of Militia than in the appointment just now of a civilian as Deputy Adjutant General of Militia.

While we thus give our views upon this subject which has occupied a large share of public attention we disclaim any knowledge whatever of military tactics; were it the other branch of the public service we might know more about it. We merely discuss the subject in a common sense view, and we feel sorry that the Government has made so serious a mistake in appointing Mr. Powell or Mr. any body else, with so little acquaintance of Military matters at the present time.

We cannot close without adverting to the very offensive allusion to our worthy Member, by the Cornwall Freeholder. In noticing the letter sent by that gentleman to the Globe it sovereignly hints that the Colonel is disappointed in not receiving the appointment himself, and goes so far as to say that military knowledge would be thrown away in the department! Its name and unparliamentary reference to the Colonel applying to the Home Government to be appointed Governor General in place of Lord Monck will be duly appreciated and carefully noted. We mistake if the Freeholder and its proprietor will not find to its cost that the appointment has been a blunder in the estimation not of merely one M. P. P. who was capable of forming an opinion upon such matters, but of a good number, when the proper time arrives. Meanwhile we can assure the Freeholder that our gallant Colonel does not belong to a clique of office seekers whose name is legion, who are clamoring for appointments, speak, write and vote for the sole object of self, irrespective of the public weal. His object in writing and speaking as he has done was from an honest conviction of duty, and tho' from the peculiar position he was in—his name having been mentioned at the close of last session by some Quebec Correspondents in connection with the office in question—some think he would have done wiser to have refrained from so publicly noticing the appointment. Yet we are sure from what we know of him, his honorable and conscientious convictions of duty alone led him to act as he has done in the matter.

Again, is it not a matter of notoriety that he introduced the Militia Bill of the last session? We believe, too, that he was requested by the present Premier to undertake the task of preparing the bill. Is it then strange under these circumstances that he should feel and speak as a Military man would do when a Government should so far forget its duty as seemingly to prefer party patronage to public interest. Had the appointment been given to a Military man, Colonel Haultain would have been pleased, his sole wish was to see the post of Dep. Adjutant General of Militia for Upper Canada filled by a man of military education. He had no desire for the appointment, never sought it, nor would he seek it, —the base insinuators of the Freeholder and Review to the contrary notwithstanding. Conscious of the rectitude of his conduct he can look upon such low bred insinuations with equanimity, and feel that in doing what he conceived to be his duty, a satisfaction which will enable him to bear the obloquy so gratuitously heaped upon him, unmoved.

MR. CONGER AGAIN.

Mr. Conger in his letter to-day says he is "not conscious of misquoting or misconstruing our remarks" on the Land Agent question, in his letter of last week—he admits afterwards that the "exact words have not been given," i. e. he gave a false quotation—just what we charged him with. We go further, we deny that we referred to Mr. Vankoughnet at all—we said the Government (the late one) "had inflicted a series wrong upon an old tried and faithful servant. By the appointment of an agent to the Northern part of the county, Mr. Hughes has but little to do, and his pay proportionally reduced." Mr. Conger represents us as saying "that the Commissioner of Crown Lands (Hon. Mr. Vankoughnet) had stopped the salaries of his agents, thereby inflicting great injustice on one of them." We complained of appointing another agent when Mr. Hughes could do all that is to be done. Mr. Boswell has the cream of the office, and Mr. Hughes can not live on his commissions and allowance. Surely an old servant ought to have the preference of any advantage, unless it be shown that he is incapable or not trustworthy—in which case he should be summarily dismissed—nothing of this kind is attempted to be shown, and yet Mr. Conger supports the shameful conduct of the last Government in sacrificing Mr. Hughes. We love fair play, and would advocate it for our enemies as well as friends. Justice and the public weal seemed to have been matters of only secondary importance with the men Mr. Conger has delighted to uphold and honor.

The settlement of the waste lands of the Crown with industrious settlers, is a matter of vital interest—there is no need in carrying out this policy to be either unjust or pro digal, in respect to public agents.

☞ Professor Hopkins' course of instruction in Sacred Music closed in this place on Monday evening. Great credit is due that gentleman for the efficient progress which his pupils have made under his tuition. He is a gentleman who appears to have a thorough knowledge, and a peculiar tact for imparting his instructions, so simple and effectual is his system that his class has been able to sing off at sight good congregational tunes on the fifth night of his course.

That he will shortly again visit our town as the sincere wish of his class, and of all those who have witnessed his abilities to teach, we have no doubt. The following motion was unanimously passed at the close of his class:

That the thanks of this Class is due and hereby presented to Professor J. E. Hopkins, for the very able and gentlemanly manner in which he has discharged his duties as a teacher of Sacred Music in this place, and would cheerfully recommend him to all those who may require his services.

The British Operative Relief Fund.

The subscriptions of Montreal amount to $49,982 80. In Liverpool, England, £30,000 have been raised. Ottawa was to have held a meeting on Monday last. Ashburnham has shown its sympathies, has held a public meeting on Saturday last, so influences to another column will show. Several other places are doing something; can nothing be done in Peterborough?

Sidney Smith for the appellant, Mr. Dennistoun for respondent. The case was ruled out, on the ground of defects in the conviction and the illegality of the By-law under which the conviction was made.

As there is a good deal of business to come before the Court, it is likely to sit most of the week. We will give the remainder of the proceedings next week.

The notice of the meeting of the Monaghan Township Council on the National Memorial to the late Prince Consort, was received too late for this weeks paper.

We repeat, that Communications must be in before Wednesday, to appear in the following Thursday's paper.

Affairs in Cincinnati.—There are many people now in Cincinnati who, we imagine, would be very glad to get out of it, but are prevented by the order prohibiting any one leaving the city. A number of Canadians are residents of the place, and we understand that they as well as the native born are required to turn out every day and work upon the fortifications on the opposite side of the Ohio river. All business is still suspended, except what is absolutely requisite to enable the citizens to procure the necessaries of life. All the able bodied men, including the negroes, are organized into companies and once in two days are throwing up entrenchments, and at nine o'clock in the evening every citizen is required to be in his own house. Troops are entering the city in large numbers daily, and martial law reigns supreme. On Thursday last the Times, a daily journal, was suppressed for writing that the Government had not conducted the war in a proper manner; but on the following day, on the proprietors making a humble apology and promising to talk no more "treason" permission was graciously allowed to them to resume the publication of the paper. The Confederates are almost hourly expected to advance upon the city.

—The Southern prisoners now confined at Camp Douglas, near Chicago, have been supplied with, and are now in the South.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

Letter No. 11.

SCOTLAND.

Just as the morning showed us the gray curtains of mist were rising from the lofty hills in the distance, we came in sight of Scotland. Instinctively the words came to our lips, and we wondered, like the Poet, if under the circumstances ever breathed

—A man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said
This is my own, my native land."

The rude crags and peaks with their stern frowns seemed far more dear to us than even in the days of earlier youth;—truly, indeed, does "absence make the heart grow fonder."

The first place we shall notice in Scotland will be

GLASGOW.

This city, the Commercial metropolis of Scotland, is said to be the third in point of wealth, population, and commercial importance in the United Kingdom. A few figures, which we find in a recent publication, will show the progress of the place:

The population in 1651 was about		14,000
"	1801 "	77,000
"	1811 "	100,000
"	1821 "	147,000
"	1831 "	202,000
"	1841 "	275,000
"	1851 "	323,000
"	1861 "	425,000

Power-loom Weaving was introduced into Glasgow as far back as the year 1792, but until 1801 it may be considered as having been experimental. At present there are 35,000 steam looms in operation.

The Iron trade is also one of great importance. So late as 1830 there were only sixteen smelting furnaces around Glasgow, at present there are over one hundred, producing the extraordinary quantity of 575,000 tons of iron annually.

The Coal trade has also increased in a proportionate ratio.

The ship-building of the Clyde is one of the best sources of the trade of Glasgow. Most of the iron ocean steamers are Clyde bottoms; the new iron-clad war-ship Warrior is from this port, and there are now on the stocks at the different ship-building yards on the river no fewer than 43 keels, mostly for ships of large tonnage for the American and India, and China trades.

Besides the above trades there are scores of manufactures of all kinds, the most prominent of which is the Chemical works of Messrs Tennant & Co., at St. Rollox.—These works cover sixteen acres of ground all under roof, and the principal chimney-stalk is 450 feet high, being the largest but one in the world.

But it is as a shipping port that Glasgow has advanced greatest. Fifty years ago there was scarcely a depth of five feet at high water, so that the river was not navigable to vessels of over 40 tons burden. In 1820 the available depth was nine feet, and as it is now 20 to 22 feet deep vessels of the greatest burden can enter with safety at flow-tide. Last year the tonnage of sailing vessels arriving at Glasgow was over 550,000 tons, and of steam vessels 850,000 tons.

In the year 1830 there were only thirty miles of streets and roads in the city; at the present time there are over 100 miles.

An idea of the thoroughfare of the City may be formed from the fact that over 600 omnibuses pass the foot of Buchanan street every day.

Like other large manufacturing cities, Glasgow has suffered largely by the war in the United States. Many of the largest manufactories have lessened their business, while others have closed altogether, and the consequence is that thousands of persons are cast out of employment.

Although preeminently a Commercial community its inhabitants are not exclusively so. The finest taste has been displayed in the location and improvement of her beautiful public parks, one of which (Kelvin-grove) is praised as the next park in the Kingdom to that at Birkenhead.—Many statutes and monuments also adorn the city in different parts. And several of the public buildings are of the highest order of architecture.

Perhaps in no city in Britain has so much money been lavished on fine Church buildings; they form by far the greatest structures of Glasgow.

The old Cathedral is one of the most noticable objects. Its history dates away back to somewhere in the middle of the 5th century, when, tradition says, St. Mungo, the reputed founder of the city, established a Bishoprick at this place. The following passage from Scottish history throws some light on the ancient Cathedral:

"Conceive an extensive range of low "browed, dark, and twilight vaults such as "are used for sepulchres in other countries, "and had long been dedicated to the same "purpose in this, a portion of which was "seated with pews and used as a Church. "The part of the vault thus occupied, though "capable of containing a congregation of "many hundreds, bore a small proportion "to the darker and more extensive caverns "which yawned around what may be termed the inhabited space. In those waste "regions of oblivion, dusty banners and "tattered escutcheons marked the graves "of those who were once, doubtless, "princes in Israel.' Inscriptions which "could only be read by the principal antiquary, in language as obsolete as the act "of devotional charity which they implored, "invited the passersby to pray for the souls "of those whose bodies rested beneath."

But much of the fame of the Cathedral has departed with the ages that are now with those beyond the flood, and the old building merely stands as a link connecting the past with the present. The Cathedral is in length 319 feet, and in width 63 feet. It is supported by 147 pillars, and is lighted by 159 windows.

In the centre of the necropolis, close to the Cathedral, and as if keeping sentinel over the solemn grounds around, is a monument to the memory of the great Scottish Reformer, John Knox.

In a straight line from the front of the Cathedral, and running towards the South, in the old Saltmarket, which was in the days of Bailie Nichol Jarvie, the residence of "Deacons, lairds, and a' that," but which now alas! is only a market for the lowest kind of hucksters, and a resort for many of the worst characters of the city.

On the Green, at the foot of the Saltmarket is an open space where the annual Fair, in July, is held, at which crowds of children and gawkies congregate to see the "Shows," and spend their pennies.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

Arrival of the Australian.

Cape Race, Sep. 8.

The steamship Australian, from Liverpool on the 30th ult., and Queenstown on the 31st, arrived on Sunday.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Lord Palmerston in a speech at Melbourne referred to the Trent affair, which he said was settled in a manner consistent with the dignity of both England and America. There was, consequently, no triumph on either side. The only triumph was that of truth and justice, which each side was equally interested to maintain.

The Times reiterates its arguments that the North cannot conquer the South, and says the time for compromise has arrived, and the worst settlement of the dispute cannot be so fatal as the continuance of the war.

The Times then draws an analogy between the position of England during the revolutionary war and the present position of the North, and says that it is time the North followed the example of England.

The Army and Navy Gazette describes Gen. McClellan's campaign as the most signal failure seen in this century.

Lord Brougham had made a speech urging the absolute necessity of neutrality and non-intervention in America.

The Liverpool Post draws attention to Secretary Seward's late Circular to encourage emigration and urges the distressed operatives of Lancashire and the Irish poor to follow Mr. Seward's advice and emigrate.

The London News urges that the Emperor Napoleon cannot be allowed to assume exclusive control in Italian affairs, and urges the British Government to speak out.

There were vague rumors that England had protested against any French occupation of Neapolitan territory, and that England even threatened a corresponding movement in Sicily, if France resorted to such a step.

FRANCE.

The Emperor Napoleon presided at an important Cabinet Council on the 28th August on Italian affairs.

A French squadron had been sent to Naples, and an English squadron, it is said, has also been placed there.

ITALY.

The latest advices from Turin report that Garibaldi and his volunteers continued their march from Reggio, pursued by a column of Bersaglieri.

There had been no collision with Garibaldi's forces and the royal troops since the trifling one reported by the Norwegians.

A proclamation issued by Garibaldi, from Catharnia, inciting the people to insurrection, had produced strong demonstrations in his favor at Genoa, Florence, and some collisions had taken place between the authorities and the people.

A telegram just received in this city, states that Garibaldi had been defeated, wounded and captured.

London, Aug. 31.

The Monitenr says that the insurrection which threatened to compromise the destinies of Italy has terminated Garibaldi after a very sharp contest, was compelled to surrender.

An Italian frigate was immediately ordered to Spezzia.

The blockade was ordered to be raised.

The capture of Garibaldi is fully confirmed.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Washington, Sept. 7.

Sunday 11 p. m.—The following account has just been received from the upper Potomac, and it is believed to be reliable:—The Confederate force, in the neighbourhood of Darnestown and Clarksburgh, is estimated at 3,000, and is composed entirely of cavalry.

It has been asserted that Jackson crossed the Potomac opposite the north mouth of the Monacy, and passed along the banks of the stream of Frederick.

A Confederate picket captured near Clarksburgh to-day, says Jacksons force is 45,000.

Advices from Gainsville, about 24 miles from Bull Run, state that the Confederate General A. P. Hill arrived there day before yesterday with 35,000 men from Richmond.

The Railroad bridge across the Rapidan is repaired, and the Confederates expect to have railroad communication from Richmond to Warrenton by the end of this week.

A division under Gen. Walker has left Gainsville for Leesburgh. My informant saw Jackson, Longstreet and Hill at Gainsville and counted 44 pieces of artillery, mostly rifled guns, none larger than 12-pounders.

Washington, Sept. 8.

Gen. Banks is sick at Willard's hotel. The attending surgeon prescribes quiet and rest as necessary for his recovery from the injuries received at the battle of Cedar Mountain.

Fort Monroe, Sept. 7.

There is great excitement here in consequence of the report that the Merrimac No. 2 had reached the vicinity of Newport News, and had an encounter with one or two of our gunboats and had driven them before her. All the shipping has been removed to a place of safety, but no fears of anything serious are entertained, as such arrangements have been made by our naval authorities as will probably make the career of Merrimac No. 2, of shorter duration than her former namesake.

Memphis, Sept. 5.

A fight is reported to have taken place at Middleburg, seven miles from Bolivar, Sunday afternoon, lasting several hours. The town was taken by the Confederates.

The Federal loss was 27 killed and 7 taken prisoners. The Confederate loss 4 killed and 9 wounded. Among the Confederates killed was Captain Shippington of St. Louis.

Washington, Sept. 7—p. m.

[illegible] killed and wounded [illegible] and additional [illegible] this morning; of the destruction of Frederick city, Maryland by the Confederate forces naturally excite much surprise, mingled with indignation and alarm.

Last night movements of our troops were in motion for the upper Potomac and Shenandoah, and to day the military operations opened.

Nearly all the Confederate troops have apparently been withdrawn from our front, probably some 60 large [illegible].

The people of the valley have contributed to the subsistence of the Confederates, and doubtless furnish them with all needed information.

A gentleman who arrived here to-day, having left Frederick between nine and ten o'clock last night via Hermitsack, says that the Confederate force there is estimated at 40,000 men under "Stonewall" Jackson. From this gentleman conversation with Confederate soldiers he derived the impression that one of their objects was to destroy the Western Central Pennsylvania Railroad, and otherways execute in that state, and having ulterior designs on Washington and Baltimore.

Baltimore, Sept. 8.

Governor Bradford has issued a proclamation calling on the citizens to organize for the protection of the State.

Washington, Sept. 8.

A paroled prisoner who arrived here to-day, reports that about 150,000 Confederates have passed into Maryland. The main body of them over the Monocacy. He had passed throughout the lines and counted 27 batteries.

This statement is believed among military men in the city.

A report reached here this morning that there was a skirmish in the neighbourhood of Poolesville.

(From Willmot Sports of the Times.)

The circle of the week brings us to tidings from the army of McClellan. The great "strategetic movement," which gave to the enemy a spoil of millions, and left to his mercy thousands of our breeding youth, is already old enough to return a European echo; but our army still blisters with its confines on the James, and the commander, whose "masterly manœuvres" lodged it there, continues to dig, and to play spades as trumps. The first applause, therefore, which, in pronouncing this fight the most brilliant performance of his life, promised he yet would be in Richmond ere a month, now seems to have been sanguine in its measure, and the general impression is coming to our figures, which multiplied that hope by six.

But the month already wasted since we received the check has not been altogether lost. Nay, probably, it has been returned reflectively, to good, for it has obliged many a loyal and enthusiastic man, who had become lost in worship of the new Napoleon, to stop hurrahing, and make a grave examination of his qualities. The result of this review has been to show that he is at least the unluckiest of men, and to impress the public extensively with the conviction that he is about the only General in the country who could have played the proud army of the Potomac down to a mere fainting handful, without a single victory.

The field for the analysis is clear. There were no special obstructions in his path to glory. Everybody contributed their aid to make him a brave man. The President lifted him to the most dazzling authority in the nation, the universal voice accorded him the qualities of Cæsar, a lavish country placed incomparable and astounding legions in his hands, and the whole world looked on to see this child of genius launch his quintupled thunders upon his meagre and cowering game.

There was no difficulty in the Young Chieftain getting to his foe, for they frequently challenged him within five miles of his lines; there was no reason why he should dread the mere headful of the enemy, for their troops were as inexperienced as ours; but still the new Napoleon would not fight, and with a strange fortitude to insult, endured the rebel flag under his nose and a blockade of the Capital during a period of five marching months, without the least sign of irritation. Everybody wondered what could be his plan, but they did not question his ability, and even half misgiving minds kept hurrahing for him to their neighbors, like the schoolboy in the church yard, to sustain their waning faith. We, among the rest, suspecting all objections to him as disloyal, helped to clamour down the grumblers, and insisted that in due time his intentions would be wisely developed to the nation. But we never once suspected (or did the public who faithfully supported him) that his plan was to let the insignificant forces of the enemy to retire without harm, until with a generous inversion of the art of war, he could seek him in his lair, and accept the odds against himself. This was not the practice of the Old Napoleon; but the repudiation of our unfledged Chieftain was so high, it was expected he would eclipse all previous reputations, and save the country by some mysterious military spell. The allowed retreat of the enemy from Manassas, however, shook the faith of many a worshipper, and scores of men of sound capacity, who in the ardor of a trusting patriotism, had till now shirked the task of thought, openly condemned the insensibility of our legions as disgraceful. Still our Young Napoleon was as importunable as the Sphinx, and the country was obliged to find meagre solace in the rather dubious solicitation, that Gen. McClellan was undoubtedly a child of genius, as he concealed his plans with profound secrecy from every one. We bear in mind, that the same compliment was frequently lavished on Gen. Wm. Walker, of Nicaraguan fame; but we also bear in mind that what was mistaken in the filibuster chief for profoundity and great reserve, was really vacuity, and that he never had a plan, or could comprehend to-day what would be good for him to do to-morrow. He, too, was a child of genius, and there was a time when the whole world occasionally showed a disposition to knock off work, in order to accept the little gray-eyed man of destiny for its historical Colossus. Like those of this class of heroes, however, he depended rather too much to destiny, and probably laughed that he had but to stalk in Incantation with the five cuts of the sword, previous to jumping into bed at night, to have responsive destiny seize him by the slack of the trousers, and make a Napoleon of him in the morning. He once held Grenada, with 6 thousand men, and had since been regularly bringing him recruits from both sides of the continent every fortnight; but he thanked the Yankee lines to extort a subsidy, and having thus deprived himself of reinforces, declared war against all Central America. The result was that his five troops were soon played away against a host of negroes and half-breeds, and the poor creature fell below the level of darkness. But comparisons are odious.

Months still elapsed after the evacuation of Manassas, with our Masters army resting in inaction, while the West was laying up glory in store for future political dominion, by victory upon victory of the most brilliant character. Our Young Napoleon was the only General who had contributed no triumph to the country, and who gave his troops no chance to vindicate the equal valor of their motion. At length, however, between the heroic respirations of the West common attention became riveted upon McClellan, and he was forced to march.

Instead, however, of moving upon Richmond by the direct path, en masse, covering Washington, and employing his whole army as he went, he left 19,000 troops to defend the Capital, and took 156,000 with him to use, at no expense of fatty emblems, and proved them under his own banner in the Peninsula. Here was a power fit for anything, if rightly trusted, and capable, according to his own pompous promise, of "driving the insolent enemy to the wall." But, in a few short weeks, we beheld his army, with Caesar at its head, shattered, decimated, say, reduced of its numbers by full seventy thousand, with the remainder virtually captives in their lines.

If there are facts, that Christ has before, and the man who refuses to exercise his reason on the subject is unfit to be a citizen. Fortunately, the Government, who never withheld from him a single soldier, nor disputed as to how a single plan, but which has suffered greatly from the slander of those who thought him good timber for a President, has already partially strengthened his complexity, and sent for General Halleck to supplant him. The maxim "better late than never" comes to our consolation at this crisis, and we hope to see some speedy action taken to drive the remainder of our proud legions which our Marlborough has stranded in the mud near Turkey Bend. If he and they combat be safely extricated from their present position, Pope had better be sent down in a direct road upon the rebel stronghold, with sufficient force to make a demonstration that will enable the beleagured Alexander to come out and co-operate with the attacking and directing force. But no more troops shall be sent to the Peninsula, unless we wish to consign them to a certain ruin; and above all things McClellan should be required to act subordinate to the chief of the retiring army. Give him scope again, and the employment of the spade will once more supersede the use of arms, and the settlement of the country be postponed, until earth shall supersede the use of brains. Whether Pope be the proper man to supersede Pompey, we, who have so burned our fingers with undue eulogism, hardly dare assert; but we know that he has acted like an intelligent commander in the West, and his capture of Gordonsville, which, if the fall of Richmond be our main desire, is decidedly the most important operation of the war, credits him for a broad margin for reliance. As for McClellan, (who, to judge by his year of leadership, is perfectly capable of playing away Europe against Nova Scotia, if permitted to control the game,) he must consent to be saved in any way he can, and then to be retired to some post, where, under good direction, his limited talents as an expert may be rendered serviceable to the country. This has been military practice and alternative since the days of Pyrrhus down to the days of Canrobert, McDowell, and Lorences; and there is no reason why the chieftain, whose sole achievement has been to manœuvre an invading force of nearly a quarter of a million out of practical existence, and whose last masterly exploit was to abandon thousands of his stricken, pleading of all that) circumstances of the case I think you will agree with me that the letter above published to shew an amount of cool impertinence and littleness of soul in the writer, which I would rain hope is not general amongst the immoral portion of this community. Before closing this communication, I beg to apologize to some of the members of the Choral Society for the abrupt removal of the Piano from their practice room. But reasons which are not necessary to mention here induced me to do so, and a proper regard to its safety made its immediate removal necessary. As the Piano has always been at the service of the public since I got it, so it will continue to be, whenever solicited in a proper manner by proper parties, but "One of the many" and every body else will have to kindly allow me to be sole judge on these points, for I will assuredly do just as I please.

I remain, dear sir,
Yours truly,
THOMPLETON BROWN.

Peterboro', Sept. 4, 1862.

To the Editor and Proprietor of the Peterboro' Examiner

Sir,

I have to thank you, for your courtesy, in publishing in your last issue, my two, rather long, (though in my opinion necessarily so,) letters of the 26th and 30th inst., and to say that I am not conscious of having either misquoted or misconstrued your remarks upon the question at issue, nothing could certainly have been further from my intention, and I think, if you look carefully over your editorial, you will find that your meaning has not been perverted, though the exact words may not have been given.

I am pleased, however, to discover a willingness on your part, to discuss questions of importance upon their merits; it augurs a better state of things, at which we should all rejoice.

My reply to your charge, that "three persons had been employed to perform the duty of one," appears to have been satisfactory, in so much as you have not alluded to it further than to say:—"if we are rightly informed, Mr. Hughes could as well attend to the duties at present performed by Mr. Boswell as not." Now, it is of this I complain. That you have given judgment upon insufficient testimony—upon the evidence of ignorant or interested witnesses—and thereupon have made statements, that are not in my opinion borne out by facts; which statements if not at once corrected, might do mischief to the very work we are all, most desirous to promote.

The question at issue, as you have stated it, is this, "are there not more persons employed as Agents for the settlement of the Country in rear of us, than are required;" to this I have replied in the negative, and in my letter of last week, furnished pretty conclusive evidence of the fact.

It is either desirable to settle the waste lands of the Crown in this Province, or it is not. If it is, and I dare say we shall agree upon this point. Then it is necessary to have Agents at convenient places, who will be prepared at all times to give to intending settlers, information, as to what lands are vacant; their quality, and the best means of reaching them; and if they are free grants, to see that each man has his own, and performs the conditions of settlement, and, to use every other reasonable means in his power to encourage imigrants and others, in their undertaking.

How, I would ask then, could the Agent at Bobcaygeon, perform this duty on the Burleigh Road, or alike duty 50 or 100 miles away, on the Bobcaygeon Road? As well might it be expected that Mr. Boswell, when at Peterson's corners, or Cedar Narrow's, could answer enquiries made at Mr. Hughes' office in Bobcaygeon! On the other hand, suppose the office at Bobcaygeon was removed 30 miles away to Gull River, and placed under the care of an agent there; a poor man desirous of settling in Harvey, Galway, or Somersville, must first travel 25 or 30 miles out of his way to ascertain what lands are vacant, then back again to see them, and again to the office to purchase, and if in the mean time, the lot should happen to be sold, he must repeat his journey, or leave as many in former times have done, disgusted and disheartened, with the difficulties thrown in the way of intending settlers in Canada.

In further explanation of the policy of the Hon. Mr. Vankoughnett, re pecting the sale and management of the lands of the Crown, I may observe, that he looked upon the office of Free Grant and Colonization Road Agents, as temporary, to be discontinued so soon as the work set apart for them was finished, and that permanent offices for the sale of Lands, would be kept open at such places as Orillia, Lindsay, Bobcaygeon, North Hastings, &c.

There is now surveyed, and laid off into lots, ready for settlement, within the united Agencies of Messrs. Hughes, Boswell, and Graham, over 500,000 acres of fair arable land, capable of giving comfortable homes to at least 2,500 families; these lands under proper management, might be settled in three years—will it be done?

And now Sir,—remembering your caution to be brief—I will leave for the present, the further consideration of the subject, in the hope, that what has been said, may serve in some degree, to bring about a more intelligent understanding of a great and important work, which is destined, if properly carried out, to make Canada the most prosperous and happy country on the Continent of America.

I am, Sir,
Your Ob't Serv't,
W. S. CONGER

Peterboro', 8th Sep., 1862..

Government Emigration Office.

Quebec, September, 1862.

Sir,

Now that the organization of a scheme for a better system of colonization is engrossing the attention of our public men, and a fresh "stimulus" thereby given to the subject of Emigration, I am induced, through the medium of the Press, to make a few remarks and suggestions to the Farmers and landed proprietors of Canada, upon the importance of devising some means to make provision for Emigrant families who arrive in this country without funds; which while tending to promote the comfort of the poor Emigrant himself, will prove advantageous to the Farmer, and beneficial, I hope, to the country at large.

The official returns from this office, published from time to time in the daily prints, show that not only are large numbers of Emigrants from the United Kingdom arriving this season by the St. Lawrence route, but that there is a considerable increase in the number coming via the States. The great drawback against which the head of a poor Emigrant family has now to contend, in the want of some "Home," or shelter, where he can place his family, while he goes out to work for their support. From the general lack of such accomodation throughout the country, and the consequent difficulty of procuring it, the majority of our Farmers give a preference to the employment of single men, which to the detriment of the whole community who have within them the elements of a steady growth, and substantial progress generally continue

To remove this objection, I venture to suggest that proprietors of 200 acre lots should not apportion more than 50 acres of land; that they should build thereon a habitable log cabin, fit for the occupation of an Emigrant family, letting it to them for a term of years the rent to be made payable in duties or money, as to be agreed upon; or some such arrangement as the following might be made:—That the Emigrant shall rent the lot for ten years, he giving one day's labor in the week, by way of payment, with the proviso that if within five years he clears and puts under crop five acres, no further rent will be required for the rest of the term; but should he fail to do so, then the bargain would be reversed. An arrangement of this sort would have the effect, if widely adopted, of securing immediate provision for the newly arrived Emigrant, and the Farmer affording this accomodation, would thereby acquire labor without paying money for it; at the same time improve his land, and attach, by kind treatment, to his interests, a family whose services or assistance might in many instances, become of incalculable value to him.

I earnestly advise all landed proprietors who may feel disposed to act upon these suggestions, to put themselves in communication with this Office, or with any of the local Agencies throughout the Province, stating what accomodation they are prepared to offer, and such information will be brought before the Emigrant on his arrival here.

I may here take the opportunity of offering a word of advice to the Emigrant coming to Canada with a small Capital. He would act wisely, if, instead of buying land—as is often done—before becoming acquainted with its character and the kind of labor required in a new country, a proceeding invariably leading to the incurrance of debt, payment of interest, and entailing various other embarrassing expenses, he were to invest his money in the Savings' Bank for a year or two, hire a log shanty for his family in some neighbourhood affording a good prospect for employment, and work at wages for a year or so, thus gaining the knowledge and experience necessary to realize independence. Such a course is not deemed degrading in Canada, and is sure to result in ultimate good. Let it be borne in mind that all families coming to Canada, whether they be possessed of £100 or £1000, must fail unless they come determined to labor themselves; and I assert, without fear of contradiction, that the head of a family who pursues the plan I have pointed out, will, at the end of a few years, be far in advance of him, no matter what his capital may be, who has not taken to the axe and the hoe. A determination to work, carried out with spirit and consistency, will bring with it a degree of prosperity cheering to contemplate, and not to be surpassed in any other part of America.

These views may be found imperfect, but in giving them, publicity I am alone influenced by my desire to promote the best interests of Canada, and only hope they may attract the attention of practical men, and be the means of having the exigency I have referred to fairly considered; if, eventually, they prove instrumental in conferring reciprocal benefits upon the poor Emigrant and the Farmer, I shall feel that my object has been fully attained.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obdt. servant,
A. C BUCHANAN,
Chief Agent.

Martial Law in Cincinnati.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of Wednesday, in noticing the effect of the proclamation of martial law in that city, says:

"The business of the city necessarily came to a stand-still; all the business houses, including some of the hotels, were ordered to be closed; and the street railway cars were stopped from running for the time being—and all for what? Why, in order that one of the main objects of Gen. Wallace—the raising of an effective army in Cincinnati, by the enrollment of our citizens—might be accomplished, for, in accordance with an order issued by him, the citizens of the various wards, at an early hour yesterday morning, turned out almost en masse at their respective places of voting. The young man, whose years would almost preclude the idea that he could handle a musket, and the old man, whose silvery hairs showed that his years were upward of three score, gathered at the places of meeting with alacrity, each apparently endeavoring to enroll himself first, as the defender of his country when his country was in need.

"That the prospect was most excellent, meeting with decided success, the result will show, as before four o'clock in the afternoon there were from three to six full companies formed in each ward, making a formidable force of 15,000 men, eager and ready to be organized into regiments, to receive their arms and to march against the enemy. This force was organized into companies by the election of officers, and a greater portion were immediately ordered to the opposite side of the river to engage in the digging of rifle-pits, and to guard the fortifications on the hills back of Covington."

The same paper says:

"Much anxiety was felt yesterday in regard to the movements of our troops on the line of the Kentucky Central Railroad and the progress of the enemy. At an early hour the operator at Cynthiana telegraphed that Gen. Smith's men were near at hand. Shortly afterward the wires were cut, since which time nothing has been received beyond Boyd's Station. Our troops are reported to be falling back to Falmouth, thirty-nine miles from Covington by railroad. All the rolling stock of the road has been withdrawn to that end, except four empty freight cars, which were left at Lexington."

FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE COMPANY.

538 Broadway, New York.

TO parties little acquainted with the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machines the careful perusal of the Company's Circular is specially commended. This circular can be had on application. It is very specific, and will be found highly instructive, having been prepared with much care and we will abide by all statements therein made.

The following brief quotation is characteristic of the entire Circular:

"This Machine is better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in market to the frequent changes and almost endless variety of sewing required in a family; for it will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect. Will sew from the finest gauze to the heaviest cloth, and even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed needle of tension, or making any adjustment of machine whatever."

Thus have we successfully overcome the most difficult point in the Sewing Machine art. It was no ordinary triumph. Defiantly can we now say, "No other Machine compares with it in this respect." Hence, have we uniformly—almost without exception—taken the highest premium, whenever the Machine has been properly exhibited in competition with other first class Sewing Machines. Hence it is that we are able to offer the following guarantee, viz.: "We warrant every Machine we sell to give perfect satisfaction than any other Sewing Machine in the market, or money refunded." We never sell a Machine on any other terms. The guarantee is as reliable as the note of any business man in the land. For more than five years have we relied upon such facts for the reputation of our Machine; and without a single travelling agent in the field, there is scarcely a neighborhood on the continent where the Machine is not favourably known. We prefer such a reputation to one based on mere "talking points," as they are technically called in the trade. Hence we make but one kind of stitch, viz. the lock-stitch, alike on both sides, requiring only one-third the thread of other kinds of stitches.

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

The thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen on Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair.

Reports were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was unanimously and most cordially approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation late the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States before-mentioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurance during the year, contained in 1189 Proposal	£454,835 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 901 Policies were issued	259,680 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS or said Policies	11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPAT ON POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees	22,990 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assured under 4,750 current LIFE POLICIES	1,065,95 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS	373,543 3 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE	98,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report Stated that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his entire approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. The steps the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £93,975 0s 6d. In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and each premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 5s 7d, to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £317,821 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinised in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realised on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonus, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured; the total additions to the sum assured, now vest d, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured: and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 75 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

Year ending 31st January.	Amounts proposed for Assurance.	Amount of New Policies issued.	No. of Policies issued.	New Annual Premiums.	Total Revenue in each year.	Accumulated Funds.

FIRE INSURANCE.

THE following table compiled from the official returns, exhibits, at a glance, the increase of duty paid to the Government of Canada, on Fire Insurance effected by different Insurance Offices, metropolitan and provincial, during the year 1861.

THE "ROYAL."

It will be seen, stands ab ve before, at the very head of the list, and maintains a rate of progress very far in advance of all its rivals and competitors. Twelve months ago, we had the gratification of recording the fact that its increase, in the year 1860, had been more than double that of any other company—had exceeded 30 per cent., of the entire increase of all the Canadian offices combined—and had, also exceeded 30 per cent, of the aggregate increase of the remaining twenty eight provincial offices. We have now t e pleasure of inviting the attention of our readers to the testimony of these later returns, which show that in the year 1861, the increase of the "Royal" was very nearly sixty per cent, in excess of the increase of any other company—that there were but three offices which came even within fifty per cent. of it, and that it was actually more than one-sixth of the entire increase of the remaining forty-four offices, London and Provincial put together. Comment upon such facts as these would be superfluous. They prove, unmistakeably, the continued advance of the "Royal" in the confidence and good opinion of the public. That advance has been, from its beginning, as remarkable as it has been rapid; and we are gladly congratulate the directors and shareholders upon it, because we regard it as the just reward of prudent management, of liberal and honourable dealing, and of undoubted stability.

By JOHN C. GUNN, M. D.,

Author of the old story known as "GUNN'S DOMESTIC MEDICINE."

OVER ONE THOUSAND PAGES,

with numerous

VALUABLE ILLUSTRATIONS!

THIS is probably the best, as well as the most thorough and extensive Book ever published, as a Domestic or Family Medical Work. Its author is now an old man, and is probably more generally known as a popular medical writer than any other living. Owing to the great popularity and extensive use of his old work, which was one of great value, but in the present advanced state of medical science is altogether behind the times. Dr G. is a graduate of several of the best Medical Colleges in the world, viz.: of Philadelphia, and of London and Paris. He has had a successful practice, a physician for nearly forty years; and it can be hardly supposed that any man can be better qualified to write such a work than he is. He has spent most of the time for several years in preparing this work—intending it, as he often remarked, as his last and greatest Legacy to Posterity.

The work contains a description of all the diseases known or common to this country—their causes, symptoms, and character—with plain and full directions for successfully treating them, telling what remedies to use; how to use them, and when; the whole stated in plain and simple language; or whenever any technical or Medical terms are used, they are fully explained; so that the commonest mind can understand them. The remedies recommended are generally of the simplest kind, such as are harmless, yet efficient, and usually such as are easily to be obtained.

Besides the diseases common to both sexes, the work contains a department on the diseases of Females, and their treatment. Also a department on the diseases of Children, which alone is worth the price of the book to mothers and all who have the care of children.

An important item in the work is its Pharmacy, or valuable Family Receipts, there being more than forty pages of Medical Receipts and Compounds, many of which will be found very important and useful in a family.

For the Examiner.

THE CURSE OF OUR LAND.

A groan! a groan comes over the wave
The piteous moan of the tortured slave,
He is bound by the tyrants and despots of earth,
Robbed of his freedom from earliest birth.

Nature has taught him that man should be free,
Oh! fellowmen, countrymen, he calls upon thee,
While massive his chains that bind him so firm,
His heart, it is full, tho' filled with alarm

But need we to listen for sighs o'er the waves,
Or the piteous moan of the tortured slaves?
Oh, yes, we must listen to each rending wail
As wafted to us by the turbulent gale.

What tho' we look to the right or the left
We find many thousands of comfort bereft,
Whose happiness shone as bright as the sun,
When first on the life stage of action began

But list! let us see has Rum been the cause
Of such violation of our noble laws;
Oh! can we? Oh! will we partake of the evil
That send us headlong down to the devil.

Mark the wan visage of husband and wife,
Who ne'er dreamt of poverty, far less of strife,
But the Demon destroyer had them overcome—
The cursed allurements the darkened fiend Rum.

Rum! Rum, thou foul fiend, promoter of strife,
Thou who directs the assassin's knife,
Filled with disgust and horrible crime,
And such last thou been thro' the annals of time.

Grim monster thou art, in our land ye dwell,
Depart, we implore thee, to thine own native hell;
Seek not to destroy any more of our kin
With thy cursed cheats ale, Brandy, and Gin.

Seek not to encourage thy mandates to sell
The liquid of fire and the essence of Hell
In barter, exchange, for poor children's bread,
For in chains we will bind thy demon like trade.

We cannot, we will not submit to thy will
To ruin good mothers, good husbands to kill,
For long hast thou reigned, and one of the worst
That ever sprung forth for blighting and curse.

But mark yet king demon, for tremble you must,
Thy throne will soon crumble and sink in the dust,
For our armies against the, in might will we send,
And then we'll shout jubilee, thy right's at an end.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

LETTER No. 12.

PAISLEY.

This place, situated about seven miles west of Glasgow, is the largest Town in Scotland, having a population of above 50,000. It has a history dating back to the year 1160, and it has always been a place famed for its manufactures, principally of checked linens, gauze, and ornamental fabrics. Silks and Persian Velvets are at present the staple manufactures of the Town. In by-gone days hand-loom weaving gave employment to hundreds of men, and the trade was classed among the first in the country, but the improvements of time in the introduction of steam-looms have done away with the old system almost entirely, and the consequence is that Paisley has lost much of its importance as a Town.

AYR.

Of the many places made memorable by association, in this country, the Town of Ayr is foremost, from its being the birthplace and early home of Scotia's rustic bard, Robert Burns.

Side by side, till this day, stand the Brigs of Ayr, the subjects of Burns' poem of that name. The "auld Brig" is a narrow, ill-formed pass, rising with a hill in the centre, and well deserves the partly-aimed reply of the "New Brig":

"——Poor, narrow footpath of a street,
Where two wheel-barrows tremble when they meet."

The road leading from the Town to the Burns' Cottage (distant about two miles) is a quiet and pleasant walk, along which the poet is said to have been accustomed to ramble in his hours of meditation, and no doubt some of his best poems were composed there. The Cottage in which the poet was born is a humble, thatched building in the old style, but part of the interior has been fitted up with great splendour, and is used as a hall, occasionally, for Concerts, public meetings, &c. It is also used as the meeting-place of the Burns' Lodge of Free Masons. It was in this room where the great Masonic celebration of the Centenary anniversary of the Poet was held, (Burns was a member of the mystic fraternity when in life.) The room in which he was born is preserved in its original simplicity, the only window being a square frame with four small panes of glass in it. There is a small, old-fashioned, settle bed in the room.

After viewing the Cottage to our satisfaction we bend our steps towards Alloway Kirk, one of the scenes in the tale of Tam O'Shanter. The Kirk lies within a gunshot of the Cottage. An old man who has lived in the neighborhood for 50 years is in waiting to show visitors the objects of interest. He pointed out to us the places where—

"Past the birks and meikle stane,
Drunken Charlie brak's neck bane
And thro' the whins and by the cairn
Where hunters fand the murdered bairn,
And near the thorn above the well,
Where Mungo's mither hanged herself."

In the Kirk-yard are the remains of many of the celebrities of Burns, although those of the poet rest at Dumfries. Marked by a small, plain slab, is the burial place of John McLauchlie, alias Souter Johnnie, Tam's and near the front railing is a tombstone which tells that the remains of Wm. Burns, the poet's father, rest there, and on the back of the stone is inscribed the affectionate epitaph written by his son:

"Oh, ye whose cheek the tear of pity stains,
Draw near with pious reverence and attend,
Here lies the loving husband's dear remains,
The tender father and the generous friend.
The pitying heart that felt for human woe,
The dauntless heart that felt no human pride,
The friend of man, to vice alone a foe
For e'en his failings leaned to virtue's side."

The Kirk is crumbling down with age, and the ruins are covered with ivy, which clambers and twines round the old building The bell bears date 1617, but the Church was no doubt built long previous to that time.

Close to Alloway Kirk is the National Monument to the Poet. On the exterior it is a plain-looking structure, and the inside is in the shape of a dome. On a pedestal is a bust in pure white marble, of the poet, and in a glass case are to be seen the pair of Bibles and the ring which Burns is said to have presented to his Highland Mary.

Down to the left runs quiet and smoothly the river Doon, still spanned by the same old bridge, looking down from which the poet no doubt conceived the favorite lines of

"Ye banks and braes o' Bonnie Doon,
How can ye bloom sae fresh and fair,
How can ye chant ye little birds,
And I sae weary fu' o' care?
Thou'll break my heart, thou warbling birds,
That wanton thro' the flowering thorn,
Thou mind me of departed joys,
Departed never to return."

It is difficult for one who admires the genius of the Bard to break away from these the scenes of so much fervid love, and beauty of feeling, and we linger there till

"The gentle gowan shuts its eye,
And twilight closes in around."

KILMARNOCK.

Another place made famous by the poetry of Burns is the Town of Kilmarnock, in Ayrshire, distant from the Town of Ayr only a few miles.

It is distinguished for its manufacture of worsted shawls, Brussels and Venetian carpets, and the "Kilmarnock Bonnets," so well known in this Country. The streets in the old Town are narrow and irregular, but the new streets and buildings are great improvements on the old. Within a mile north of the Town stand the ruins of Dean Castle, once the residence of the Earls of Kilmarnock. In this Town first arose the sect of Christians known as Morisonians, the old Church where Morrison preached being still in existence.

HAMILTON.

A few miles in an Easterly direction from Glasgow is situated the Town of Hamilton, "a burgh of Regality, dependent on the Duke of Hamilton."

The palace and grounds are the principal objects of interest, the former it is said surpassing in grandeur even the Queen's palace at Balmoral. In a huge stone mausoleum near the palace, and standing 102 feet in height, are the remains of the late Duke, embalmed, and placed inside of a leaden coffin. The floor of the mausoleum is marble, and is in several thousand pieces, so ingeniously worked together that a seam cannot be detected in the whole flooring. From the shape of the building the slightest noise resounds like thunder through it.

In a Park near the Palace are to be seen the celebrated Hamilton White Cattle, believed to be the oldest breed in Britain. They are milk-white in color, with black muzzles, horns, and hoofs. Their habits are peculiar, and partake much of the wild. They always go in herds and can seldom be caught for slaughter. They are shot while others die of old age.

THE FIRST ENGLISH BIBLE.—A copy of the first complete English version of the Holy Scriptures, of extreme rarity, was sold recently in London. It is entitled, "The Bible; that is, the Holy Scriptures of the Olde and New Testament, faithfully and truly translated out of Douche and Latyn into Englyshe. MDXXXV." Angular Gothic letter; folio; "prynted in the year of our Lorde MDXXXV., and fynished the fourth daye of October." The entire volume was superintended by Miles Coverdale, but portions it had previously undergone revision by William Tyndall and others. The present is regarded as one of the best copies extant, being quite perfect. A fac-simile of a letter from Miles Coverdale to Thomas Lord Cornwall, respecting his translation, and a portrait of William Tyndall, are also inserted. It was sold for £260.

THE PIPEMAKER'S "FIRE!"—On Saturday night, about one o'clock, an alarm of fire was raised in Garden Street, above Number's Garth, the Sandgate of Sunderland, with a female cry of "Oh, my poor mother's house'll be burnt doon!" Everybody ran on the instant, and everybody could see through the windows that large flames of fire were shooting and gleaming in the interior of the building indicated. "Fire! fire!" was the cry, and as "invisible blue" became promptly visible, but immediately darted off at a tangent, where he had looked through the door, and exclaimed, triumphantly, "It's a fire, it's a fire; we maun hae the engines!" Up came the mob—smash went the windows—out crash went the door; as a troop of beavies rushed to do "their duty" but imagine their discomfiture at beholding a respectable, genteel personage before the furnace like an ancient alchymist—he and his fuse being accused in a cool outlook where stables once and fires now. "Is not the devil d'ye ca' him?" exclaimed the artist in clay, as "he took the entry" from his lips, and contemplated the vanishing host.— "Why, man, this is the house o' five fires the beyside red quarry. A House wantin' fire and it's only me, bairns pipes!" The citizens gathered, and peace and the chancellor of the exchequer were restored.

Frightful Occurrence to the Female Blondin.

On Thursday night an event took place at Highbury Barn Gardens, London, which not only produced the greatest consternation amongst the visitors, but has resulted in the most serious if not fatal consequences to Miss Selina Young, or, as she is styled, the "Female Blondin," the celebrated rope walker, who created such a sensation at Cremorne Gardens last season by crossing the Thames on a tight rope.

Shortly after ten o'clock the "Female Blondin" ascended one of the stages connected with the rope, which is about 160 feet in height, and by the aid of blue fire, and attired in a suit of armour, proceeded on her perilous voyage in mid air. She reached the eastern stage in safety, and again returned, performing the feat of wheeling the barrow. All this time she crossed the rope covered with a sack and then commenced her final tour to the starting point, in the midst of fireworks discharged from each end of the balancing pole she carried in her hand. She had arrived within about 20 feet of the western stage, when the Catherine wheels at the end of the pole reached their greatest velocity, at which moment reports were heard, and stars of various hues were emitted. At this instant it was plainly observable that there was a fearful oscillation of the pole, as well as of the unfortunate performer. A general cry was raised that she was falling. The pole fell from her grasp, and the performer toppled over. For a moment she appeared to cling to the rope, either by the legs or hands; but whether from or otherwise, in another second she was seen descending head-foremost into the midst of the trees beneath her. The scene of horror and consternation at this moment, coupled with the screams of the females present, may be well imagined and hundreds rushed to the spot where the poor creature lay as the foot of a tree, completely doubled up and apparently lifeless.

LATEST PARTICULARS.

"Yesterday morning, at eight o'clock, Mr. Clare mont, Mr. Saul, and Mr. King met in consultation at Highbury Barn, and it was discovered that the chief injury of the sufferer is the fracture of the neck of the femur (thigh bone); but there are also others. She was sensible, and at her own request has since been removed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where she now remains an inmate. The unfortunate woman was to have performed last night at Wolverhampton. There was but one feeling prevalent after the accident, which was that the sooner these dangerous sensation exhibitions are put a stop to the better.

DIFFICULTY ABOUT THE STARS AND STRIPES.

Several Southern officers were on board the Great Eastern, on her last voyage from New York to Liverpool. How they managed to obtain passports does not appear, but soon after sailing they allowed it to be known who they were, and the way in which strong feelings were freely expressed on their part and on the part of the Northerns on board led, on more than one occasion, almost to a violent collision. One incident of the voyage is thus narrated by a correspondent of the New York Times:

"But the latter (the Southerners) were not disposed to be satisfied with mere cheers and wordy impatience. They desired a more positive—a national recognition. A ball was planned for the entertainment of the passengers and officers of the ship. It promised to be a pleasant affair. A committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements, and to fit up one of the large dining saloons for the occasion. During the day preceding, one with an observant eye might have discovered some ladies, recognized as belonging to the secession party, busily engaged in stitching together strips of red and white bunting—evidently for a flag—to be used, when? The ball-room, of course, must be decorated, as is customary on ship-board, with national ensigns. Would the treasonable emblem of the Southern Confederacy be recognised as one of these by the commander of a British ship? Really, it would be quite a feather in the cap of the 'chivalry' to have their as yet unrecognized rag grouped as an equal with the glorious ensigns of Britain and America. Such a triumph would be well worth the effort. Secessia, in the person of one of her sons, approaches the commander — asks — perhaps demands — the recognition of her flag. Captain Paton —noble British sailor—gentleman that he is—gives a mild but positive 'No, I can't,' to the absurd request. But the British and American flags, in peaceful and mutual recognition, already adorn the ball-room.— Secessia, unabashed by the first discomfiture, demands the removal of the hated 'Stars and Stripes'—else she and her chivalrous children will scorn to join in the dance. 'Gentlemen,' said the captain, addressing a dozen or so odds and ends of 'secesh' chivalry then and there gathered together—'Gentlemen, I am very sorry that this difficulty has occurred. We are all here on board of this ship on our passage between America and England, and for our mutual enjoyment this entertainment has been devised. It is my duty as commander, to carry the British and American flags—the American at the main and the British at the mizzen—when we arrive at or depart from either of the ports between which we sail. If a festival is gotten up, the two flags are joined in decorating the deck or saloon. I have no feeling in this matter, gentlemen—I am but doing my duty to my Queen and to the company in whose service I am. I regret you cannot be satisfied, but I must do my duty. The flag must remain.' This was all very sensible, and uttered in the most conciliatory and kindly tone and manner possible. But 'Secesh,' though convinced was not satisfied. He was bound he would not dance under the Yankee bunting. A representative of the persuasion, standing in the midst of his disappointed and chafing fellow-rebels and stretching himself up to the height of his tall figure, with solemn face and striking attitude, and slapping his left breast against his dexter palm, declared he "could not dance under that flag. His country—his bleeding country—demanded that he should not so disgrace himself." To this sentiment the assembled rebels gave loud applause. The Captain, smiling and bowing—no doubt amused at this piece of mock tragedy, in which he was enforced to bear a part—then withdrew. The loyal Americans were highly pleased at the turn things had taken, and most of the British approved the Captain's decision, and applauded his course, though some of them sided with the secession mate."

The British and Southerners who withdrew from the ball, spent an uproarious evening over a basket of champagne.

Things Worth Knowing.

I know—that my Redeemer liveth. Job 19: 25.

I know—in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day. 2 Tim 1: 12.

We know—that he was manifested to take away our sins. 1 John: 5.

We know—that all things work together for good, to them that love God. Romans 8: 28.

We know—that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. 2 Cor. 5: 1.

We know—that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. 1 John 3: 2; 5: 15, 18, 19, 20.

SUSPECTED INFANTICIDE.—We learn that a portion of the body of a newly born child was discovered on Friday or Saturday last, on Mr. Reed's farm in Otonabee. An inquest was held by Dr. Harper, but as the vital organs as well as other parts of the infant had been devoured by hogs or dogs, it was impossible to tell whether it had been born alive or not, and the jury were to prepare a verdict accordingly. It is reported that the mother of the child was a woman who applied a few days ago for a certificate of character from Mr. Reed's and who subsequently left, and has not since been heard of.

—It is stated by the Quebec Gazette that the Prince of Wales will visit Quebec on the 7th October, and remain there for a few days. He will be accompanied by Lord Lyons, the British Minister at Washington, and Lord Newcastle, Governor General of Canada.

The Catholic Press.

From an article in the Christian Advocate and Journal, it seems that the Catholics in Europe are, if possible, further behind the age than those of this continent;

In a recent letter I gave a comprehensive survey of the Catholic periodical press of Germany, based upon two representations of an ardent ultramontanist. Since forwarding it I perceive that a less sanguine publicist has thought it good to give the world his representation of the state and prospects of Catholic journalism. This he has done in a pamphlet published at Augsburg, under the title, "Another Word on the Catholic Press of Germany." We thought the showing of the first writer poor enough; but it seems that he made the case better than it actually is. Hear the new reporter; "The anonymous Frankburger," says the Augsburger, "has sketched in his pamphlet, with youthful enthusiasm, an extremely rosy picture of the condition and hopes of the Catholic church in Germany. We cannot share these views, and another full churches, nor the undeniable renunciation visible also many departments of the church can blind us. On the forty souls in Germany, scarcely only a half are Catholics; but while the Protestant part possesses about fifteen hundred bookstores, there are, above all, scarcely twenty-four Catholic ones of any importance. (!) Among the two or three thousand German journals we have, at most, only seven or eight of the larger, and some twenty of the smaller kind of our tendence and stripe. (!) Germany certainly numbers a clergy of sixty thousand; and yet we think we do not err or we are afraid that all the Catholic periodicals of Germany taken together, have not sixty thousand subscribers. (!) These are the figures and statistical questions which contain fruitful instruction for all who are willing to see and they show who in Germany shapes not only the literature, but also public opinion."

What an illustration is furnished in the above facts of the comparative intelligence of Protestant and Catholic communities! There are two letters of one and the same nation, in all respects, except their different religious convictions, as nearly alike as can be; and yet what a contrast.

—Colonel Fletcher Webster of the 12th Massachusetts Regiment, killed at the second battle of Bull Run, was the eldest son of Daniel Webster, and the only surviving child. He was born during the war of 1812, at Plymouth, New Hampshire. Having a taste for private life, he never entered actively upon the field of politics. He was however, Secretary of Legation to Caleb Cushing, on the Chinese Embassy of 1843, and held a position, during the administrations of Presidents Pierce and Buchanan in the Custom House at Boston. Last year his regiment was attached to General Banks's corps. He leaves a wife and children.

—Corporal Christopher Lee, who was shot in Wyoming and Hampshire Counties by the breaking out of a pistol which he was carrying in his pocket, was buried on Sunday last in a large lot of ground given by Mr. Alfred Simonds, of the Royal Exchange Tavern, Cornhill, for the purpose. The coffin, which was covered with the flag, was borne to the grave by six soldiers, and a number of public men followed as mourners. The corporal was a native of Ireland, and was about 30 years of age.

The new Crisis in the Nations Affairs.

From the Baltimore American.

Travelling in a circle for the past year, the Union armies and those of the Confederacy have met again at Bull Run and Manassa's Hill, at Lexington and Fort Donelson. Let us pray Heaven that both parties may not meet at other old points of contact supposed a brief period since impossible. It is not worth while to disguise the deep mortification all must feel at this unexpected remanding to old positions; it is useless to consider ourselves as not deeply humiliated at our defeat by the ragged and half-armed conscripts which make up the Rebel levies. The first step toward success is to look into results and to ascertain what has caused them; the next to reorganize our shattered columns, pitch overboard every incompetent functionary, civil or military, and take the field again the very first moment it can be done.

But have we the courage to do all this? Is it not too often the case that for fear of "hurting the feelings" of some incompetent Hotspur or needle in shoulder-straps, he is continued in command until another and another host of the gallant and confiding rank and file find premature graves, while the flag they carry is dishonored, and the whole nation is humbled in the dust? Of the soldiers who have fought of late not a single complaint comes up that is worth a moment's attention. Nobly, gloriously have they borne themselves, pouring out their blood like water to cover the blunder of their commanding generals, counting their lives as nothing if they might but repair the errors which had compromised the safety of our nationality on the battle-field. Fighting in isolated squads or divisions, left to grope about miles asunder, wit out adequate supports, outflanked, raked at every turn by murderous masked batteries whose locality was never ascertained in advance for lack of a proper reconnoissance, cut up by dashes of cavalry into every available opening—our own, meanwhile, nowhere; they have been beaten, disheartened, disorganized, lost their supplies, to finally retreat to the old stronghold of a year ago, and unwillingly groans over the loss of brave comrades sacrificed by the hands uselessly.—Who will deny that this is so? Who can deny it?

And look at the condition of those who, better led, have reduced them to this humiliating condition. One hundred and fifty miles or more from their former late base of operations near Richmond, pricked forward by their officers at the point of the sword over such a distance of weary marching, carrying perhaps a week's supply of poor food in their haversacks or dependent on the cornfields to keep starvation at arm's end, and firing railroad iron slugs for lack of cannon balls, they have shown an endurance and valor worthy of a better cause; while their audacious generalship has enabled them to rely upon our supply trains for what was lacking, our own brave soldiers suffering sadly in sight of their own smoking provisions meanwhile. These are the facts plain to view and which nothing can conceal, which ought not to be concealed. To give to such incompetent Generals more troops is but pouring water in a sieve, is but sending more valuable lives to be heedlessly wasted, anew to break the hearts of the people at home, anew to compromise the life of the Nation.

We have hoped and hoped through long and weary months; we have encouraged all with the hope that some inspiration would come to the leaders from the fiery patriotism and enthusiastic devotion of the people, until, as the finale, here we are after twelve months of sickening suspense, of hope deferred, at the old point from which we set out.

Now we shall not propose a policy for our leaders, civil or military; but there is one thing the nation—like the old Athenian orator—will insist upon, and that is: action! action! action! We believe to-day that our troops confronting the rebels outnumber them, besides being superior in everything which constitutes equipments and supplies. In fact, we believe it will be God's mercy to Maryland and to the national cause if the rebel leaders persist in their advance, thus necessitating their being beaten back, overwhelmed, annihilated.—Commended to idleness for even a few weeks now, and who does not feel, with horror creeping over him, that the old bulletins concerning Manassas would be repeated with sickening monotony—"the roads impassible in consequence of the rains," &c.

Let the rebels advance into Maryland if that is needful to the salvation of our nationality. All would muster then to drive them back, more especially if the capital might be endangered from the rear. Only some such terrible exigency will, we fear, set things on motion again; only that arouse the nation fully to do its duty.

We write with earnestness now, because while this murderous avalanche impends over the State, the intimation comes that "jaded horses" are to be "re-fattened" and "tottering waggons repaired" at Arlington Heights, and it is no time to mince matters. With men already in front sufficient, if properly handled, to drive back and utterly overwhelm the Rebel horde, here we are to-day with their scouts feeling their way to the banks of the Potomac within 50 miles of us, and we are expected to sing out from the watch-tower "all's well. We shall do no such thing.

Let none mistake our views or purposes in this matter; let none suppose that the threatening rebel raid has "driven us from our propriety." The most probable view of the case which presents itself as to immediate future is that the rebel chief will force our own again to battle by attempts to cross the Potomac above them, thus compelling victory to fall upon our banners. We have faith in the ability, in the generalship of McClellan, if he will only give the during foe no rest.

And for one other part of the programme—and that is the long talked-of "draft;" let it be no longer delayed. Force everything available into the field, every man, every gun, sword, revolver, and pound of powder, and end the war. We can do it, and do it soon.

The nation is smarting under its needless reverses—it is worn out with delays. We have gone along leisurely; we have been servenly contemplating the mythical movements of the famous "anaconda," until that remarkable specimen of zoology is at last called up at his starting place in front of Washington. Stir him up, we say, strike him more; let him "crush" those he has long threatened, or let his keepers hide their heads in confusion.

Weakened as is the rebel host by its severe losses, its procurious supplies, and endangered as it is by reinforcements from further import, it must never be suffered to remained intact, to boast of its successes, to plague us no more. Must we be forced to leave once more to we have been forced to leave on numerous other occasions, that just when it might have been annihilated, it owed its safety to our forbearance, or, worse, to our timidity; or shall we rush upon and finish the work half done at such a fearful cost? The rank and file are ready; it is for our rulers to determine upon a course in which to hazard our path

THE WAR NEWS.

The Southern army as our readers are aware has been in Maryland, threatening Pennsylvania and Washington. Last week the Northerners turned out their whole force to give them battle, and after several sanguinary conflicts the Confederates were forced to cross the Potomac into Virginia. Their retreat appears to have been skillfully conducted as they retired slowly, and brought along all their stores and means for transportation. Several severe battles were fought last week at several points along the Potomac. On Wednesday the battle of Antietam is described by the correspondent of the New York Tribune as one of the greatest fights since Waterloo. There were 200,000 engaged from dawn of day till after dark, and then closed without a decisive result. The loss on both sides was very severe, but the numbers are not given. The Federals lost 10,000 men and it is said the loss of the Rebels is as great. The Confederates are now on their own soil again, and will be ready to meet their foes. Expectations are high that the new levies of men will enable the Federals to crush the rebellion. Time will show how far these expectations are reliable.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ELECTIONS.

The Niagara Western, Malahide and Eastern Divisions have returned their members. Five more divisions have yet to hold their elections before November. A considerable amount of interest is being had in these elections, and we trust good men will be returned.

We observe from the Newmarket Era that Mr. McMaster is meeting with encouraging success throughout the Midland Division, and our contemporary speaks with confidence of that gentleman's victory. It would be a lasting disgrace for North York, to say nothing of South Simcoe, to return such a fossil as J. W. Gamble. We happen to know Mr. McMaster, and we know him to be a thorough staunch Reformer, an enemy to corrupt and base practices. Being the carver of his own fortune, by a strict attention to business, he will be no patron of useless and idle drones. His honesty and integrity are above suspicion, and his independence of mind and circumstances place him above all fear of complicity with malpractice and jobbery. We are satisfied the electors of the Midland Division could not do a greater honor to themselves, and service to the country, than by returning with an overwhelming majority over the bankrupt politicians opposing him William McMaster as their representative in the Upper House.

The County of Peterborough Agricultural Show.

The Annual Show of this Society will be held on Thursday next, the 2nd of Oct., in the Store House of Charles Perry Esq., in rear of the Methodist Chapel. It has been deemed advisable to have it there in place of the Town Hall as heretofore, as there is much more room and convenience in and around the building to exhibit both articles and animals. The Committee have made full arrangements for the care and safety of all articles brought for exhibition. We trust every one interested in Agriculture—and pray who is not?—will visit the Show, and that our Agricultural friends will bring all they can, and bring the best they have, and let us have a grand show. The exhibition will be opened also in the evening, to accomodate those who cannot come during the day. By the rules of the Society the entries of Ladies' and Mechanics' work must be made on the evening before. Exhibitors will please notice this rule to prevent confusion, and to enable the Committee and the Judges to get through their labour earlier and with more satisfaction to all concerned.

☞ We have received a Communication from X on the subject of the Peterboro' and Port Hope Railway, and regret much that it was handed in so late as to prevent its insertion in this week's issue. It shall appear next week. We have also one from O. K., referring to an imposter going through the country, which will receive attention again if the writer favors his name. We direct attention to "Observer's" letter elsewhere.

We are obliged again to leave some articles which we would have liked to insert, in consequence of the donsed space

Visit of Dr. Cameron.

The gentleman above named is about to visit Peterboro as already notified by advertisement and bills. We direct those who are interested in the cure of the eye and ear diseases to see him:

We copy the following extracts in his favor, which we are sure will be satisfactory to the afflicted:—

"The study and practice of Medicine—like every other progressive science—embraces such a vast field that physicians have, in modern days, been compelled to turn their attention to the special branches of the profession. We have, therefore, now doctors who devote themselves exclusively to one single kind of disease, to the continued study of which they have paid the attention of years, until a well earned celebrity rewards their skill. Among this class we must include Dr. Cameron, now sojourning at the Pepper House, in our town, who enjoys a high reputation as an Artist and Oculist. We learn that he has just performed another successful operation for strabismus, on the eye of Mr. William Madden, a brother of the Councilman of that name, who is well-known among us. We advise, therefore, all who are so unfortunate as to suffer from any affections of the eye or ear, not to miss this opportunity of securing the valuable services of Dr. Cameron, whose sojourn here is short.—Brant Courier.

A Wonderful Operation.—On Thursday last, Dr. Cameron, who is now in the American Hotel, in this village, performed a very successful operation, on the ear of Seth Davis, an old gentleman aged 76 years, who had been deaf for the last fifteen years, so that he could not hear the ticking of a watch held at the ear. Dr. C. was assisted in this operation by Dr. De Rolette, a resident physician of this place. The operation was that of extracting a large tumor from the drum of the ear, which had grown three years previous; and we are happy to say the operation was completed with very little pain, and Mr. Davis could hear the ticking of a watch, when held twelve inches from the ear, a thing he had not done for fifteen years.—Ex.

THE HON. SIDNEY SMITH.

This gentleman appears to be fairly domiciled among us. He is following his legitimate calling of a Lawyer, and our last Court of Quarter Sessions rang again with his stentorian voice. Whatever he may have done for others while in charge of a port folio, it is pretty clear that he has not done much for himself. He appears anything but a rich man for being a Minister of the Crown. He begins his profession anew, and we hope he may be successful, and no doubt if he had never left it he would be a richer man to-day. We trust too that he will return to his "first love" in politics, and though eschewing being a "grit" deem it anything but a discredit to be a "radical"—the Rebellion Losses Bill to the contrary notwithstanding.

Fire.—We are grieved to learn that the barns, stables, and outhouses of Mr. James Jack, of the Township of Smith were, with their contents, burned to the ground last week. From what we can learn, it is supposed to be the work of an incendiary. This appears the more extraordinary as Mr. Jack is one of the most unoffensive and worthy individuals in the neighborhood, and he has the sympathy of all who know him. What leads to the belief that the fire was wilful is, that Mr. Jack about 8 o'clock at night discovered a fire from the house in the old barn, which was soon extinguished, and about 2 o'clock next morning he was aroused by the fire in the new barn. Mr. Jack looses all his hay and grain crops, lumber sleighs, &c. The new barn was an excellent one, 60ft. long. We regret to learn he has no insurance upon either building or crops, loss at least $1,200.

☞ The Ottawa Citizen gives a report of a Speech made by Hon. J. S. McDonald, at the nomination of the Eastern Division, at Athol, in which language is said to have been used by him unworthy of his position as a gentleman and the Premier of Canada. We should be happy to be enabled to refute the charge by a reliable party who heard the Speech.

Speaking of the Civil War in the United States, the great philosopher, Thomas Carlyle, recently remarked, "that it was the dirtiest chimney that had been fired this century, and should be allowed to burn itself out."

Peterboro' Choral Society.—We have been requested to state that those members of the Choral Society having copies of the Harmonia, Sacra or Convention Chorus Book in their possession, belonging to the Society, will please leave them with Mr. J. I. Davidson, Secretary.

There was no meeting of the Town Council on Monday night, so the rate is not struck yet. We understand that the Committee recommend that it should be 13 cents in the dollar, equal to a fraction more than 2s. 7d. in the pound.

Death from Cutting a Corn.—Last week a young man named William Craig, aged about 20 years, a member of the Belleville Constabulary, came by his death under the following melancholy circumstances. On Sunday morning the 27th ult., the deceased being very much troubled with a corn, commenced paring one under the little toe of the right foot; whilst doing so he accidentally made an incision, causing for the moment hemorrhage to a considerable extent. Not thinking it of any importance, the deceased dressed, put on a light pair of boots, and attended divine service. Next morning one of the orderly men fixing from the two along the inside of the leg and up to the body, became much swollen and discolored, causing alarm; bled all over the body, Dr. Mallaney having been called, applied the only remedy that could be of any avail, viz., cold applications, but all to no purpose. Erysipelas set in, and on the third day his whole body became livid, whilst the corpse from which it originated presented scarcely any appearance of injury. On the 5th day after the commencement, the abscess became swollen, and the body quite discolored, the poor fellow suffering the most intense pain, and died in great agony.

Communications.

A Visit to the Back Country.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—Having occasion to visit the new settlement between Bobcaygeon and Gull River, I drove out a few days since, in company with a friend, which afforded me a good opportunity of seeing something of the country and the people who inhabit it.

The Village of Bobcaygeon, (running water,) so called after the small River of that name, connecting Sturgeon and Pigeon Lakes, being the Southern terminus of the "Bobcaygeon Road," is the "entire pot" and starting point to the back country. The Road runs directly North to Lake Nipissing, a distance of about 120 miles, 50 miles of which is finished, and settled for nearly the whole of this distance.—Here, in 1836, at a time when the Government of the day was endeavouring to open up a water communication between the St. Lawrence and Lake Huron, by way of the Trent, and "inland waters" of these Counties, a wooden Lock of small size was constructed, which remained unused until 1856, when it was replaced by the present substantial stone structure, which serves to open up to Steamboat navigation, the country from near Peterborough to Lindsay and Fenelon Falls.

At Bobcaygeon there is an extensive Saw-mill, and a very good Flowering-mill, with two runs of stones—t ese mills are the property of Museom Boyd Esq.; there are also two or three Stores, several Public Houses and a Post Office. The village stands upon one vast quarry of Limestone, of very superior quality from which the Lock was built.

After leaving Bobcaygeon we passed a considerable quantities of pine, but which, as we left the vicinity of the river and lakes, became merged in heavy timbered hard wood; the soil appeared to be very good and tolerably free from stone. After travelling about four miles, however, the limestone showed itself in large quantities and continued so for nearly seven miles further, when we suddenly passed into a purely granite formation.

At Silver Lake, nine miles from Bobcaygeon, there is a Post Office, Store, and two taverns; the land just here is poor.—After leaving the limestone the land begins to improve and the road is really very good. The soil, a "sandy loam," resting upon a subsoil of pulverized granite and clay, with a slight covering of black muck, which, judging from the appearance of the crops, must be rich and productive. Granite boulders and heavy ledges of granite rock showed themselves on almost every lot—except these there is scarcely a stone to be seen. I noticed that on the Galway side almost every lot was improved, while on the Somerville side of the road but few lots were cleared upon or occupied, though the land was equally good. Upon enquiry I found that a large portion of Somerville had been sold to speculators, who were holding it for high prices.

Eighteen miles from Bobcaygeon the road crosses the Burnt river,—a stream of considerable dimensions, furnishing a large amount of water power,—here also there is a Post Office, two small Stores two Taverns, and a Blacksmith's Shop. Just below the bridge there is an excellent Saw and Grist Mill, property of John Hunter Esq.; above the bridge about a mile stands the Saw-mill of H. M. Casey Esq., a very excellent structure. The country, after leaving the Burnt River, for four or five miles is very rocky and rough, and the road, the worst upon the whole line. At the end of the fifth mile I observed a change for the better, and before we reached Gull River we passed several excellent farms, the road was also the best I ever saw in a country so new.

Arriving at Gull River just at the close of a beautiful day, the scene presented to our view as we descended from the high ground over which the road passes, was really delightful. Looking through the opening into the valley below you see for the first time the clear blue waters of the Gull River gently winding its way through an almost unbroken forest, to be swallowed up in those of the mighty St. Lawrence.

At this point—30 miles from Bobcaygeon and 50 miles from Peterboro,'—the Government has laid out a Town, "Minden," which from its central position and great natural advantages must soon become a place of considerable importance. Here they have a Post Office—supplied three times a week—two or three Stores, two Taverns, and about 50 inhabitants. Up the river a mile or a mile are the large Mills erected by Mr. Cummings for the manufacture of lumber and flour. To the Northward two miles, on the line of the road, upon a small stream running into the Gull River, stands the Saw mill of the Messrs Gauser; and further to the North and East a Mr. Cameron has erected and put into operation a very excellent Saw Mill. We also heard of several others which it is said will be ready in the course of a few months: one by the Messrs Ferguson, a second by Mr. Daniel Burk, and a third by Mr. ——; all of which it is believed will be required to manufacture for the use of the settlers.

The land about Gull River appeared to be of pretty fair quality, and, with the exception of some huge granite boulders, very free from stone. Further Northward along the line we were informed that the country is generally more broken and rough, yet the per centage of arable land is believed to be large. The crops every where were reported good, and from the appearance of those we saw on the ground and harvested, were better than I had even hoped to find them, after the fearful drouth of spring and early summer. The "plant-house," of which I had read some account in your paper a few weeks since, has also done considerable mischief to the wheat and oats. Fears were also entertained that the early frosts would injure the potato crop; it is greatly to be hoped that such fears are groundless, as any diminution in quality or quantity of that important article of food could not be otherwise than severely felt.

Remaining over Sabbath at Gull River, I was pleased to learn that divine service would be held in the School House at 11 o'clock, by Rev. Mr. Beck, Rector of Bobcaygeon, who read the morning services, and preached an excellent and impressive sermon to a respectable and attentive audience—and again in the afternoon, two or three miles away.

I was, also, gratified to learn that—although no regularly appointed clergyman had been stationed there—the spiritual interests of the people had not been altogether neglected, as the Methodists (who are generally first in the field,) had for some time partially supplied this want by quelling one of their ministers to preach there occasionally, and that the Rev. Mr. Clark, a very pious, worthy Presbyterian, preaches every alternate Sunday, besides which they have had an occasional visit from the Rev. Mr. Vickers, of Lindsay.

There was one other feature noticeable as we passed through this extensive settlement, strongly indicative of the character of its inhabitants: which was the very complete organization of school districts, and

After travelling about four miles, however, the limestone showed itself in large quantities and continued so for nearly seven miles further, when we suddenly passed into a purely granite formation.

At Silver Lake, nine miles from Bobcaygeon, there is a Post Office, Store, and two taverns; the land just here is poor.—After leaving the limestone the land begins to improve and the road is really very good. The soil, a "sandy loam," resting upon a subsoil of pulverized granite and clay, with a slight covering of black muck, which, judging from the appearance of the crops, must be rich and productive. Granite boulders and heavy ledges of granite rock showed themselves on almost every lot—except these there is scarcely a stone to be seen. I noticed that on the Galway side almost every lot was improved, while on the Somerville side of the road but few lots were cleared upon or occupied, though the land was equally good. Upon enquiry I found that a large portion of Somerville had been sold to speculators, who were holding it for high prices.

Eighteen miles from Bobcaygeon the road crosses the Burnt river,—a stream of considerable dimensions, furnishing a large amount of water power,—here also there is a Post Office, two small Stores two Taverns, and a Blacksmith's Shop. Just below the bridge there is an excellent Saw and Grist Mill, property of John Hunter Esq.; above the bridge about a mile stands the Saw-mill of H. M. Casey Esq., a very excellent structure. The country, after leaving the Burnt River, for four or five miles is very rocky and rough, and the road, the worst upon the whole line. At the end of the fifth mile I observed a change for the better, and before we reached Gull River we passed several excellent farms, the road was also the best I ever saw in a country so new.

Arriving at Gull River just at the close of a beautiful day, the scene presented to our view as we descended from the high ground over which the road passes, was really delightful. Looking through the opening into the valley below you see for the first time the clear blue waters of the Gull River gently winding its way through an almost unbroken forest, to be swallowed up in those of the mighty St. Lawrence.

At this point—30 miles from Bobcaygeon and 50 miles from Peterboro,'—the Government has laid out a Town, "Minden," which from its central position and great natural advantages must soon become a place of considerable importance. Here they have a Post Office—supplied three times a week—two or three Stores, two Taverns, and about 50 inhabitants. Up the river a mile or a mile are the large Mills erected by Mr. Cummings for the manufacture of lumber and flour. To the Northward two miles, on the line of the road, upon a small stream running into the Gull River, stands the Saw mill of the Messrs Gauser; and further to the North and East a Mr. Cameron has erected and put into operation a very excellent Saw Mill. We also heard of several others which it is said will be ready in the course of a few months: one by the Messrs Ferguson, a second by Mr. Daniel Burk, and a third by Mr. ——; all of which it is believed will be required to manufacture for the use of the settlers.

The land about Gull River appeared to be of pretty fair quality, and, with the exception of some huge granite boulders, very free from stone. Further Northward along the line we were informed that the country is generally more broken and rough, yet the per centage of arable land is believed to be large. The crops every where were reported good, and from the appearance of those we saw on the ground and harvested, were better than I had even hoped to find them, after the fearful drouth of spring and early summer. The "plant-louse," of which I had read some account in your paper a few weeks since, has also done considerable mischief to the wheat and oats. Fears were also entertained that the early frosts would injure the potato crop; it is greatly to be hoped that such fears are groundless, as any diminution in quality or quantity of that important article of food could not be otherwise than severely felt.

Remaining over Sabbath at Gull River, I was pleased to learn that divine service would be held in the School House at 11 o'clock, by Rev. Mr. Beck, Rector of Bobcaygeon, who read the morning services, and preached an excellent and impressive sermon to a respectable and attentive audience—and again in the afternoon, two or three miles away.

I was, also, gratified to learn that—although no regularly appointed clergyman had been stationed there—the spiritual interests of the people had not been altogether neglected, as the Methodists (who are generally first in the field,) had for some time partially supplied this want by quelling one of their ministers to preach there occasionally, and that the Rev. Mr. Clark, a very pious, worthy Presbyterian, preaches every alternate Sunday, besides which they have had an occasional visit from the Rev. Mr. Vickers, of Lindsay.

There was one other feature noticeable as we passed through this extensive settlement, strongly indicative of the character of its inhabitants: which was the very complete organization of school districts, and School Houses, most of which appeared to be well attended by clean, healthy children.

Whilst on our way homeward, contemplating what we had seen, I could but think how vastly would the condition of many whom we saw about our towns be improved if they would but transfer themselves and their families, to some of these new Townships, where they could, in a few years, acquire comfortable and happy homes for themselves,—where, instead of living as they now do, depending upon their daily labor and raising, their children in idleness and crime—they would soon be ranked among the proud yeomanry of the country.

With best wishes for the prosperity of the settlers along the Bobcaygeon Road,

I am,
your obedient servant,
Observer.

Peterboro, Sep. 22nd, 1862.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Mr. Editor, I am persuaded you would do a favor to more than one of your readers by inserting the following quotation from the speech of the late Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, to which reference has been so frequently made in regard to a proposed union between the Church of Scotland and the Church of England. Any one who reads it will see that Dr. Bisset proposes a union among all Christians on a very simple basis—the Bible, to which he invited all to a new consideration; that by conforming all Creeds and forms to it, they may become a United Church without insisting upon a minute uniformity, but leaving a certain amount of discretion to congregations in regard to the manner of worship. I think this is the the fundamental error of all denominations that they presume to worship God without reverently following in simplicity God's own instructions. But hea. Dr. Bisset, who, in this undoubtedly forgets his office and expresses only his individual sentiments.

I remain, Mr. Editor,
your truly,
A Member of the Church of Scotland and of Canada.

Peterboro, Sept. 17, 1862.

The Moderator's Closing Address.

The following are the most important portions of the closing address of the Rev. Dr. Bisset, the Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland:

On articles of Religion and Confessions.

Our Articles of Religion or Confessions—indispensable preliminaries no doubt to securing the great blessing of an Establishment, and in seasons abound, necessary bulwarks of the cardinal articles of that faith once delivered to the saints—are means at the same time of debarring from a National Church many worthy and conscientious men on the one hand, while they prove on the other an ares to the unscrupulous; and the time will assuredly arrive when that worship which is forever settled fast in heaven, and which the Spirit of truth declares profitable, that the man of God may be perfect in every good work, will, without the adventitious aid of humanly arranged propositions and conclusions, alone prevail against all the powers of darkness; nor will any considerable progress be probably made in that which should be a supreme object of longing supplication to every follower of Christ, the unification of His Church, until different communions, in a spirit of humility and charity, concur in a revision of their religious constitution, making them at once more simple and comprehensive. Our uniformity of worship, salutary under reasonable limits as a symbol of the oneness of a National Church, has sometimes been sought to be enforced with a rigor that would preclude all aspirations after higher excellence, and which could produce everything else than Christian unity. Against all these incidental evils, which may be said to inhere in an Established Church, it should be our constant endeavour to watch, choosing the good, and thankfully improving all our advantages as labourers in Christ's vineyard.

The first overtures for Union should be from the National Church.

But who is to make the advance on which so great moral interests hang towards this reconciliation? We have liberty of action greater than was ever accorded to any Reformed Established Church in framing our religious constitutions, laws and ordinances; our proceedings are still regarded with interest and respect by the great body of our countrymen, and we continue to be viewed as the chief religious institute for the training of the people of Scotland. It is from my confidence in the strength of the National Church, and not from any feeling of insecurity, that I think the first overtures ought to proceed from us. The suggestions which I have to make in this regard proceed not from any a ere love of change; nor are they brought forward as the views of any ecclesiastical or political party; I have abstained from communicating them to a single individual, that the error of or blame, in any be incurred, may be confined to myself. Did I not regard them of importance as a means, with God's blessing of gathering in the dispersed of our Israel into one, and building up our people in charity, temperance, and holiness, I should have kept them locked up within my own breast; but, revolving the matter frequently within private, and with earnest application to God in prayer that He would, keeping me back from error or delusion, point out the path of wisdom, under the peculiar circumstances in which Scotland is placed, as a member of the United Kingdom of Britain, I feel constrained with all frankness to declare them.

Changes in the Forms of Worship likely to revive and strengthen the Church.

Yet here are others who have gone out from us; and those who in some measure share these sentiments and feelings are an increasing body, because they are dissatisfied, not with our doctrine, but with our external forms of worship, and who yet yearn after an Established Church. Their charge is, that we have departed from the landmarks set us by all the greatest lights of the Reformed faith, and have fallen in unum peccatis omnium—an age of violence and rebellion and maddened passion, from which no good precedent or permanent example can be safely taken. Their complaint is, that our services are bald and cold; that they are ill fitted to evoke and sustain the feelings and emotions which become worshippers; that we come together rather as an audience to hear a lecturer or teacher than to pour forth our confessions and desires and prayers for mercy and forgiveness through the blood of Christ; that when prayer is made, it is rather that of a presiding minister than of the assembled people; that they are wholly at the discretion of one man, however unobjective may be his gifts; that this is an unreasonable cause common prayer, for that they often toil after him in vain; that through our present system they are made passive and silent rather than living worshippers, and are not called to coming them within the sanctuary the Lord Jesus with the words; though it be written, "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation;" that, while we employ the divine songs of the Sweet Singer of Israel, the man after God's own heart, in our service, we rob them of their fair proportions, and mutilate the praises which his ardent and heaven-directed spirit believed most acceptable to God, in as much as to his own voice he is ever invoking the aid of harp, or psaltry, or stringed instrument, whereas we repudiate the rich addition of instrumental music, however solemn the instrument may be; that the position which we take both in singing and in prayer is a manifest contradiction of what is seemly and proper; for that to sit, when sounding the praise of the Lord Most High, is to deprive the voice of half its power; that to stand in prayer is contrary to the practice, whether of the ancient Church or of the first ages of Reformation, and is at variance with the natural dictates of a mind quickened by God's Holy Spirit to profound veneration. The regulation of these differest matters, if there be truth in ecclesiastical history, was at one period at least left to congregations and their pastors and rulers, and to them, it is humbly submitted, this Church might commit such power with greater security than any other; inasmuch as, if any attempt were made to return to the forms and usages of a better age against the mind of the major part of a congregation, or even to the offending prepossessions of any considerable portion of it, we have, through the subordination of our judicatories, ample means of granting redress. In support of most of the changes for which a permissive grant is here solicited they can quote the great names of Calvin and Knox, who not only approved of but composed liturgies, and furnished some very important portions of the beautiful service now in use in the Church of England.

King George the Third.

One is struck by the English character of King George—English in his doggedness and his prejudices, but equally English in his conscientiousness and his frankness. It is strange to reflect on the evils incurred by the United Kingdom through the accident of her wrong-headed ruler being a virtuous man. Had that latter particular been reversed, such huge political aberrations would have been impossible.

Mr. Thackeray, in his lectures on the Four Georges, touches on the last days of the third George with a pathos rarely reached in modern literature. The passage is a gem of exquisite beauty. "I have," says he, "seen his picture as it was taken at this time, hanging in the apartment of his daughter, the Landgravine of Hesse Hamburg—amidst books and Windsor furniture, a hundred fond reminiscences of her English home. The poor old father is represented in a purple gown, his snowy beard falling over his breast—the star of his famous Order still lolly shining on it. He was not only sightless; he became quite deaf. All light, all reason, all sound of human voices, all the pleasures of this world of God, were taken from him. Some slight lucid moments he had; in one of which, the Queen, desiring to see him, found him singing a hymn and accompanying himself on the harpsichord. When he had finished, he knelt down and prayed aloud for her, and then for his nation, concluding with a prayer for himself, that it might please God to avert his calamity from him, but, if not, to give him resignation to submit. He then burst into tears, and his reason again fled.

"What preacher need moralize on this story? What words save the simplest are requisite to tell it? It is too terrible for tears. The thought of such a misery smites one down in submission before the Ruler of kings and men, the Monarch supreme over empires and republics, the inscrutable Dispenser of life and death and happiness, victory. 'O brothers!' I said to those who heard me first in America—'O brothers! speaking the same dear mother-tongue—O comrades! enemies no more, let us take a mournful hand together as we stand by this royal corpse, and call a truce to battle!'—Low he lies to whom the proudest used to kneel once, and who was cast lower than the poorest; dead, whom millions prayed for in vain. Driven off his throne; buffeted by rude hands, with his children in revolt; the darling of his old age killed before him untimely; our Lear hangs over her breathless lips, and cries: Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little!"

"Vex not his ghost—oh! let him pass—he hates him
That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer!"

Hush! Strife and Quarrel, over the solemn grave. Sound, trumpets, a mournful march! Fall, dark curtain, upon his pageant, his pride, his grief, his awful tragedy!"

New Phase of the Roupell Case.

From the abrupt termination of the case at the Guildford Assizes the evidence that was to have been adduced on behalf of the defendant was not alluded to; but if this had been gone into, it would have tended to make the inquiry of a still more extraordinary character. The defendant Mr. Waite, is a tradesman in London, and possessed of considerable property, and the Norbiton Farm estate was purchased by him at the Auction Mart for £15,000, and he has since laid out £5,000, upon the property, so that he had a very large sum at stake; and when he was called upon to give up the property on the ground that the deeds that were executed were not valid, upon the supposition that a forgery had been committed he spared no expense in procuring evidence, and the case that would have been set up on his behalf was that both the deed of gift and the will of 2d September 1856, under which Mr. Roupell came into possession of the property, were genuine instruments, and very strong evidence indeed would have been brought forward to establish these facts. It would, of course, have also been suggested that William Roupell's confession of perjury was merely an after-thought for the purpose of getting the property back for the use of his family, and there were a great many strong facts that would have materially favoured such a suggestion. It appears that there were nearly fifty witnesses at Guildford on behalf of the defendant, a great many of whom had had intimate as well as extensive business transactions with Richard Palmer Roupell, the father of Mr. William Roupell, and were perfectly well acquainted with his handwriting; and the greater part of these witnesses would have expressed their belief that the signatures to the will and deed of gift were the genuine signatures of the old man, and they would have spoken to this important fact without the slightest doubt or hesitation. It at the same time appears to be perfectly clear that, but for what has since taken place, the genuineness of these signatures would never for one moment have been disputed. Besides the evidence of these witnesses to the handwriting, there were a great many who would have proved that the deceased had upon several occasions stated that he had given the Kingston estate to his son William, and that he had nothing more to do

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Washington, Sept. 18.

10 p.m.—The rebel prisoners captured by our scouts near Leesburg, were brought into the city this evening. They say the rebel force under Gen. Hood, lately stationed at Leesburg left that place on Monday morning for Williamsport, for the purpose of reinforcing Longstreet.

The prisoners were unable to accompany their regiments on the march to Williamsport on account of the exhaustion.

Hood's force was about 5,000 men.

Indianapolis, Sept. 19.

Adjutant Stanton, of the 17th Indiana Regiment who escaped from Munfordsville immediately after the surrender of that place to the rebels, has reached this city. He reports that the garrison there, numbering 4,000 or 5,000 men, comprising the 17th, 50th, 60th, 67th 68th and 69th Indiana Regiments, and one company of cavalry and 10 pieces of artillery, surrendered.

The surrender was made on Wednesday morning, our forces being completely surrounded by Gen. Bragg's force, estimated at 30,000 men.

Our loss in killed and wounded was 50. The rebels acknowledge a loss of 700 on Sunday.

Harrisburg, Sept. 19.

The great battle was resumed this morning at Sharpsburg.

The gentleman who furnishes us with the foregoing intelligence is one of our most respectable and intelligent citizens, and says that while the battle of Wednesday was not a decisive one, it was a contest in which all the advantages were with Gen. McClellan, who coupled the field of battle at the close of the day.

Philadelphia, Sept. 19.

The Inquirer has a special despatch from Baltimore, which more than confirms yesterday's good news.

Gen. McClellan on Wednesday gave the rebels four hours to surrender. They refused, and General McClellan went at them again, and the ground was literally piled with rebels killed and wounded.

They were completely invested and surrounded on all side, and there was not the least possibility or chance of escaping utter annihilation.

Gen. McClellan is only waiting his despatch announce the complete success of his army. This news was brought by an officer accompanying the body of a New York Colonel, and is reliable.

Washington, Sept. 17.

At three o'clock this afternoon intelligence was received that since half past five o'clock this morning the fiercest and most sanguinary battle of the whole war had been in progress. All the corps d'armee which Gen. McClellan had taken with him to Fredrick were massed at the point indicated, and the engagement is believed to have been between the whole of the two armies.

There is reason to suppose that the losses on each side have been very great, as the requisition for medical stores, and the arrangements for wounded men to be sent to Rochesterville immediately, are larger than have ever been made at any time.

Cario, Sept 19.

The fleet carrying the rebel prisoner to Vicksburg, was fired into at Prentice opposite Napoleon, Arkansas. Several balls passed through the Tilan, killing a number of rebels. None of our men were hurt. The gunboat landed a force and gave the inhabitants 15 minutes to remove the women and children at the end of which time the town was burned.

FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

536 Broadway, New York.

TO parties little acquainted with the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machines the careful perusal of the Company's Circular is specially commended. This circular can be had on application. It is very specific, and will be found highly instructive, having been prepared without care and we will abide by all statements therein made.

The following brief quotation is characteristic of the entire Circular:

"This Machine is better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in market to the frequent changes and almost endless variety of sewing required in a family; for it will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect. Will sew from the finest gauze to the heaviest cloth, and even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed needle or tension, or making any adjustment, of machine whatever."

Thus have we successfully overcome the most difficult point in the Sewing Machine art. It was no ordinary triumph. Definitely can we now say, "No other Machine competes with it in this respect." Hence, have we uniformly—almost without exception—taken the highest premium, wherever the Machine has been properly exhibited in competition with other first class Sewing Machines. Hence it is that we are able to offer the following guarantee, viz.: "We warrant every Machine we sell to give perfect satisfaction than any other Sewing Machine in the market, or money refunded." We never sell a Machine on any other terms. The guarantee is no reliable as the note of any business man in the land. For more than five years have we relied upon such facts for the recommendation of our Machine; and without a single travelling agent in the field, there is scarcely a neighborhood on the continent where the Finkle & Lyon is not favorably known. We prefer such a reputation to one based on mere "talking points," as they are technically called in the trade. Hence we make but one kind of stitch, viz. the lock-stitch, alike on both sides, requiring only one thread the thread of other kinds of stitches.

N. B.—Local Agents wanted in every county throughout the West. ☞ Special inducements offered.

Now all good people both rich and poor,
I'll tell you of a Cheap Cash Store,
You'll know the shop by the British Flag,
So hasten there, and do not lag.

There's Brooms, Blacking, and the best of Tobacco, and Snuff that will make you sneeze
With Biscuits and Bread, if you please,
Red Herrings, Boiled Eggs, & the best of Cheese

You can get Fresh Yeast, Sweets and Toys
That please both the girls and boys,
Besides Maple Sugar, Onions and Coffee,
Mustard and Candles, Salt and Toffee.

You can get at the shop Fish Hooks and Lines,
And good Potatoes of all kinds,
Besides Cigars, and Pictures to sell,
Needles, and Laces to lace the boot.

There's Starch, and Soda, and nice Hand-circle,
That children can have fun on the cold Winter days.
Very fine Rings, Combs, and Studs,
Brooches, Thread, Beads, and small Wooden tubs.

So all good people take my advice,—
If you want to get anything very nice,—
Just call at the shop and try my luck;
You'll be sure to be suited to your mind.

Jesse Watterson is a kind-hearted man,
And he'll please you all as well as he can.
Mean people get trust, with a shuffling tale,
If they had their due they'd be put all in gaol.

We'll shout my boys for the Christmas feasts,
And go to J. Watterson's for our Turkeys and—
For Chickens and Ducks he can't be beat, (Geese

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen on Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Dunnaillan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair.

There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States before-mentioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurances during the year, contained in 1189 Proposal £454,825 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 961 Policies were issued 350,600 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS on said Policies 11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPATING POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices by reassurances and guarantees 28,800 1 6
TOTAL SUM Assured under 4,759 current LIFE POLICIES 1,955,93 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS 373,903 3 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE 96,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report States that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his cordial approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £93,975 0s 0d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 16s 7d., to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £217,821 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinized in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realised on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured; that the total additions to the sum assured, now vest d, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured: and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 75 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

FIRE INSURANCE.

THE following table compiled from the official returns, exhibits, at a glance, the increase of duty paid to the Government by the different Insurance Offices, metropolitan and provincial, during the year 1861.

THE "ROYAL,"

It will be seen, stands as before, at the very head of the list, and maintains a rate of progress very far in advance of all its rivals and competitors. Twelve months ago, we had the gratification of recording the fact that its increase, in the year 1860, had been more than double that of any other company—had exceeded 20 per cent., of the entire increase of all the London offices combined—and had also exceeded 30 per cent, of the aggregate increase of the remaining twenty eight provincial offices. We have now to chronicle the fact that its increase [illegible] has been [illegible] the whole of the remaining [illegible] offices, which show that in the year 1861, the increase of the "Royal" was very nearly sixty per cent, in excess of the increase of any other company—that there were one three offices which came even within fifty per cent. of it, and that it was actually more than one-sixth of the entire increase of the remaining forty-four offices, London and Provincial put together. Comment upon such facts as these would be superfluous. They prove, unmistakeably, the continued advance of the "Royal" in the confidence and good opinion of the public. That advance has been, from its beginning, as remarkable as it has been rapid; and we cordially congratulate the directors and shareholders upon it, because we regard it as the just reward of prudent management, of liberal and honorable dealing, and of undoubted stability.

(From the N. Y. Herald's Special Correspondent.)

ON BOARD PILOT BOAT "ECLIPSE," Off Montauk, Sept. 7, 1862.

We have been here waiting the arrival of the bark George Henry, Capt. S. O. Buddington, since the 2nd inst., and up to ten o'clock this morning there has been no sign of the long expected ship. While we have leisure it will be our duty to make a brief resume of the expedition under Mr. Hall, which was terminated in many respects so satisfactorily. Mr. C. F. Hall is a citizen of Cincinnati, Ohio. For many years he has been interested in the explorations of these unknown regions, and conceived an idea that, by his read-up knowledge of the place, he might be able to add some new pages to the history of the place, and possibly discover the fate of a portion of the ill fated Franklin expedition. For years this was the theme of his ambition, and in the spring of 1860 he came to the eastward, with a view of purchasing a vessel suitable for his exploring purposes. Failing in getting such a vessel as he wanted, he was nothing daunted, and resolved to carry out his plans and expedition by the means of a small boat.

At this time Messrs Williams & Haven, of New London, were fitting out the bark George Henry for a whaling cruise on the Arctic Seas, and they tendered Mr. Hall a free passage for himself and boat and such articles as he deemed necessary for the prosecution of this lonesome and hazardous journey. The kindly offer of this house was accepted by Mr. Hall, and Captain S. O. Buddington gave him much valuable assistance in regard to his outfit, and a general outline of the country which he was about to explore. The Bark George Henry had picked up the British exploring bark Resolute in the Northern Seas, and had made several voyages to the icy regions, and she promised a safe transport to the scene of operations. Mr. Henry Grindell, of New York, assisted manfully all of Mr. Hall's wishes, and did much to prepare the adventurer for his perilous journey. Captain Buddington had brought home with him on his last voyage a full blooded Esquimaux, who answered to the name of Cad-la-go, a very intelligent man, and Mr. Hall engaged him as a guide and interpreter until he should become familiar with their language.

The little expedition was ready about the middle of March, but they did not sail until the 29th of the same month. Owing to the unfrequented path they pursued, it was not until the 17th of July, 1860, that the first intelligence reached us from this vessel. She, at that date, was at Holstinefberg, in Greenland. Mr. Hall, in his letter, announced the death of Cad-la-go at sea. The story was full of pathos. The poor Esquimaux in his last hours was constantly expressing his longing for his icy home in these syllables:—"Tiek ho sik ho?" Do you see ice?" By his death Mr. Hall lost a valuable assistant; and it was impossible to replace him at the time.

On the 23rd of July, 1860, the George Henry sailed for the west side of Davis Straits, and did not reach Knew-gum-in-ooke harbor until August 17. This was too late in the season to start on his journey northward, and consequently Mr. Hall changed his plans somewhat. First, he settled the fact that Frobisher Strait was a myth, and was only an inlet or deep bay, on whose northern shore he stood on the 21st of August, 1860. On the 27th of September 1860, his boat was destroyed in a terrible gale of wind, and thus a terrible blow befell his plans. Nothing had been heard of the George Henry since October 30, 1860, when she was reported via England, with three hundred barrels of oil on board. Many supposed this vessel, with all hands, was lost; but a dispatch, dated St. Johns, N. F., Aug. 22, 1862, cleared up all doubts, and as it is one of interest we insert it here:—

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., August 22, 1862.

I am bound for the States, to renew my voyage. I have not prosecuted my mission to the extent proposed, on account of the vessel; but I thank God that he hath empowered me to do so much. I have determined the fate of probably two boats' crew of Sir John Franklin; have solved the mystery of three hundred years relative to Sir Martin Forbisher's expedition under Queen Elizabeth, and have learned the fate of five of the men captured from Forbisher by the Esquimaux. I have found and identified the exact place of their landing, and prior account of Warrick's sound, from whence Forbisher attempted to plant a colony of one hundred men. I have recovered Avasea, Vareeh, a large number of relics of said expedition and have explored over one thousand miles of seacoast, including the so-called Forbisher's Straits, which I found to be a deep bay, terminating in latitude 63 degrees 48 minutes north, longitude 70 degrees west. I have also discovered a great glacier and a mountain of fossils, between Hudson's Strait's and bay of Forbisher. The George Henry was about to depart for the States' August 9, 1861, but the thick-ribbed ice kept her entombed until August 18. The ship's company subsisted mostly through the winter by the generous hospitality of the Esquimaux. I bring with me a family of these people—a man, wife and child. The record of my work exceeds three thousand pages. I will report details to you of my expedition on my arrival.

C. F. HALL.

To Henry Grindell, New York.

As some of our readers may not be wholly familiar with the expedition of Forbisher, we append a few facts in relation to it, which will serve to explain a portion of Mr Hall's despatch:—On the 7th June, 1576, Captain Martin Forbisher sailed from Deptford, England, with two barks and a pinnace for the purpose of discovering a north-west passage to China along the northern coast of America. Great interest was manifested in England in reference to this expedition. Queen Elizabeth then on the British throne, was present at the sailing of the vessels. After passing the coast of Labrador kept northward until the 19th of August, when they landed on an island where many natives were seen with boats. The narrator continues:—"The next day we weighed and went to the east shore of the island, and I and the captain, with four men more, went on shore, and there we saw their houses . . . . . The people called to us, and we rowed to them, and one of their company came into our boat, and we carried him on board and gave him a bell and a knife, so the captain and I willed five of our men to set him ashore at a rock, and not among the company that came from; but their wilfulness was such that they would go to them, and so were taken themselves and our boat was lost. The next day we stood in near the shore, and shot off a gun and sounded a trumpet; but we could hear nothing of our men. This sound we called the "Five men Sound." The following morning the snow lay a foot thick on our hatches."

The vessel lay off and on for several days, and, although they saw many of the native boats, they could learn nothing of the fate of the five men. They then sailed homeward, and arrived in Yarmouth, England, on the first of October.

The following year (1577) Frobisher again sailed with three small vessels and provisions for a year "for further discovery of the passage to Cathay and other countries there-unto adjacent." The expedition reached the islands near the entrance of which is so-called Frobisher's Strait, which was the place of their former visit. They saw many of the natives who led Frobisher to believe that three of his five men of the year previous were still living. The natives tried in various ways to entrap the Englishmen, but they were not successful. They undertook to carry a letter from Frobisher to his missing men, but nothing came of it. The following is a copy of this letter:—

In the name of God, in whom we all believe, who, I trust, hath preserved your bodies and souls among the infidels, I commend me unto you. I will be glad by all means you can devise for your deliverance, either with force or with any commodities within my ships, which I will not spare for your sakes, or anything else I can do for you. I have on board of theirs a man, woman and child, which I carried away hence last year. Moreover, you can declare unto them that if they deliver you not I will not leave a man alive in their country. And thus unto God, whom I trust you do serve, in haste I leave you, and to him we will daily pray for you. This (Tuesday) morning, the 7th, August, 1577. Yours to the uttermost of my power.

MARTIN FROBISHER.

The men were not delivered, and their fate has always been a sad mystery. Mr. Hall promises to unravel the past and the fate of these men, lost three hundred years ago.

To Mr. Hall the world at large are much indebted; he gained his knowledge by the most severe experience. His life has been one of toil, hardship and privation. His energy has been indomitable, and but few men would run such risks with so little prospect of success. Mr. Hall was meagerly fitted out in comparison with other explorers. At the time he left the Arctic Expedition under Dr. Hayes was about starting, and the public looked upon Mr. H. as an ambitious but not wise man. But now he comes home with the most valuable knowledge and experience, and should be start again he will be doubly prepared to prosecute his mission to the extent proposed. With his limited means he has accomplished more in ratio than one half of our Arctic explorers. His energy will be a good guarantee of his future explorations, and our public men who are interested in these matters will feel like lending him a helping hand.

THE ARRIVAL OF THE GEORGE HENRY.

Bark George Henry, New London, Sept. 13, 1862.

The bark George Henry, Capt. S. O. Buddington, having on Board Mr. C. F. Hall, the Arctic explorer, arrived at ten o'clock this morning. Mr. Hall is in excellent health, and is sadly grieved at our national affairs. The details of this expedition are of an unusual interest, and in some particulars put to blush the costly and unsuccessful expeditions of the British Government. Without a vessel or an assistant he has accomplished the work of a dozen men, and brings the fate of those who perished nearly three centuries ago.

Mr. Hall is a mild and unassuming gentleman, full of energy and tact, and has won the admiration of scientific men of this and the Old World. He arrived in the Arctic regions late in 1860, and as the seas was free from ice, he was anxious to immediately proceed with his mission, but, notwithstanding the bright aspect of affairs, he wisely took the counsel of the Esquimaux, who would not consent to make up a boat party for the purpose of prosecuting the work. The intervening time was occupied in learning the Inuit or Esquimaux language from the natives, who, by their contact with the whalemen, he was enabled soon to understand and be understood. In the matters of clothing and food Mr. Hall adopted the Inuit style, and was dressed in skins and fed upon raw meats, with a due share of blubber. By his courteous manners and powers of adaptation he soon became a favorite among the natives, and they were over of the greatest assistance to him.

During the long and weary winter months Mr. Hall was not idle, for with his boat he settled the fact that Frobisher's Straits was only a deep indentation or bay. On the 21st of August, 1861, he stood on the high land at the northern shore, and saw the whole sweep of land around the bay. On the 27th of September, 1860, the frail boat upon which he so much depended was totally lost. Fortunately at the time two English whalers were in a bay—latitude 62 degrees 62 minutes, longitude 65 degrees 05 minutes west—and Captain Parker who commanded one of them, promised Mr. Hall a boat, which he has to leave at a designed place for his use. By some means the Englishmen did not leave the boat, and Mr. Hall says that he thinks the ships were blown out of the bay; and yet he is anxious to hear the true history of the case. The cause of humanity demands an explanation also.

Mr. Hall returned to the George Henry, and learned that the schooner Rescue or Amarct, a tender to the bark, had been lost in the gale of the 27th September. In reference to Frobisher's discoveries, it appears that the ancient navigator and explorer entered the bay, and finding that his progress was impeded by fixed ice, supposed that it must be an open strait frozen over, and the British government have never since pushed its further exploration. The lay of the land is very different from the lines laid down upon the charts now in use. This fact is and has been known by the whalemen who frequent its locality; but they supposed it to be a strait. But no official change has been made by any government. Mr. Hall has a very large and carefully prepared chart of this bay, and will in due time publish it to the world; but at the present time he deems it proper to withhold its features.

In 1861 his explorations were renewed with energy. He had become acclimated, and was fully alive to the amount of work which was before him. A whaleboat was now procured from the George Henry, and with a crew of six Innuits, male and female, he started on his northern journey. The natives take their families with them when on these expeditions, and the women pull an oar with them. Dogs are also of the company, and several native boats are taken for the purpose of hunting and fishing with.—Thus provided with personnel and materiel they started, living on prepared food in small quantities, but mainly depending upon the game captured on the way.

Mr Hall went to Countess of Warwick Sound, and after much difficulty succeeded in discovering the place where Frobisher attempted to plant a colony. A considerable time was spent here in obtaining relics of that ill-fated colony. At nearly every place of their debarkation relics were found consisting of pieces of coal, brick, wood, and a portion of a cannon-shot, which might have been used as boat ballast. The coal had been overgrown with moss, and a dark vegetable growth; the brick looked quite fresh and new; the wood was simply chips, which, although embedded in the coal dust for nearly three hundred years are well preserved. The piece of iron is well worn with the rust of so many years.

One of the most palpable facts in connection with the discovery of these people of "ye olden time" is that Mr. Hall discovered a trench twenty feet deep and one hundred feet long, a specimen of dry dock leading down to the water. In the excavation the party of Frobisher's men who were captured by the Esquimaux on his first voyage, with the assistance of some of their captors, built a small vessel in which they were to embark and sail to England. In due time she was completed and put to sea, but heavy weather coming on, and their vessel proving unseaworthy, they were obliged to return. Despairing of ever reaching their native land, and being severely frost bitten, the captives soon died.

The facts of their mode of living and attempts to reach England were gathered from the Innuits. Mr. Hall says that the traditional histories of the Esquimaux are remarkably clear and explicit, and can be relied upon to the greatest extent; and I believe that those who have been familiar with this class of people coincide in the same opinion.

The information respecting the fate of two of the boats' crews of Sir John Franklin's expedition is not yet as clear as could be desired. The facts are these:

While on one of his sledge journeys, in 1861—for he has made several—a party of strange Inuits came to his stopping place, and from them he learned that three years ago two boats' crews came down Hudson's Straits, bound through the straits. These men, "cudlemas," or white men, stopped on one of the Lower Savage Islands (which is near the mainland on the north side of Hudson's Straits,) and here they left what the Innuits called "soft stones." One of the natives, who knew the use of fire-arms, saw the "soft stones," and pronounced them to be leaden bullets. All traces of these were subsequently lost, and Mr. Hall, not knowing that the Kitty, a Hudson's Bay Company's ship, had been lost there five years previously, supposed these two boats' crews to be a portion of the Sir John Franklin expedition, from the fact that that regretted explorer, not knowing how long he might be detained in the ice, had laid in a very large supply of ammunition and leaden bullets, and that quantities had been taken in the boats when they left the larger vessels; and in their endeavors to get through Hudson's Straits, and on to Labrador, they had thrown away all cumbersome articles, and thus the bullets came in this place. Of this matter Mr. Hall will make some further search in history before he will permit his inferences to have too great a weight in his narrative.

Mr. Hall has discovered a verifying and interesting mountain of fossils at the head Frobisher's Bay, which has furnished him the materials for an extensive scientific article on that abstruse subject. He also discovered an immense glacier near Queen Elizabeth's Land. This he named the "Grinnell glacier," in honor of Mr. Henry Grinnell. It exceeds three thousand feet in height, is one hundred miles long and fifty miles in width. Mr. Hall has brought home with him a very interesting family of Innuits or Esquimaux. Ebierbing, the husband, is a fine looking fellow, about 24 years of age; but he is not so large and good looking as was Cad-la-go. Tuk-ee-lik-too, his wife, is about the same age as her husband, and is the interpreter. Mr. Hall informs me that she is the best interpreter in the Artic regions. Her knowledge of the country and its traditions is wonderful, and any explorer would feel justly proud of her services. Tuk-er-lik-e-ta, the infant child and is a fine child. The father and mother went to England some years ago and were presented to the Queen. They, of course, are not so much surprised at seeing a civilized country.

In addition to expedition relics, Mr. Hall has a large collection of memorials of his social sojournings among the Innuits. They consist of a variety of articles, cut from bone and ivory, representing polar bear, seals, walruses, ducks, &c. They are very interesting specimens of workmanship, and coming from so remote a region are doubly valuable.

According to Mr. Hall, life in these high latitudes is not so difficult of preservation as is generally supposed, the snow and ice houses of the Innuits being exceedingly tight and comfortable, and their coarse animal food rendered palatable by the sharpness of appetite engendered by the keen atmosphere of an extreme northern climate.

Mr. Hall states that to Captain Buddington he is indebted for much very valuable assistance, and further states that he Captain is an accomplished navigator and explorer. The Esquimaux family went over to Captain Luddington's house this evening.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

LETTER No. 13.

EDINBURGH.

Edinburgh is admittedly the most picturesque City in Europe. The traveller may attempt to find in his memory a parallel but in vain.

By three flights of stairs the street is gained from the level of the Railway station. Turning to the right we are, after five minutes walk Princes Street, on which stands the famous Monument, built by the Citizens of Edinburgh to the memory of the writer to whom they owe so much, viz: Sir Walter Scott. It was built between the years 1840 and 1844, at a cost of about £16,000. It stands 180 feet high, and is one of the finest stone structures in Britain. In the middle is a marble statue of Scott, in a sitting posture with one of his favorite dogs stretched at his feet.

Proceeding up Princess Street we pass the Nelson Monument and the Royal Observatory, and by ascending the grass walks we reach the summit of Calton Hill where a few columns of the unfinished National Monument may still be seen. A fine collection of statuary by the deceased worthy Sculptor, Forrest, now shown for the maintenance of his widow and family, is also located on the hill. The view down Princess Street from this point is like that which one has when he sees a panorama view passing before him. The whole length of the street can be taken in at one glance, with its moving multitudes. Calton Hill also commands a magnificent view of the Frith of Forth, the hills of Perthshire the coast of Fyfe, and the coast and hill of East Lothian. A good view is also had of Salisbury crags and Arthur's seat made memorable by Scott in his "Heart of Mid Lothian." Says the writer: "If "were to choose a spot from which the "rising or setting sun could be seen to the "greatest possible advantage, I would be "that wild path winding around the foot "the high belt of semi-circular rocks called "Salisbury Crags. The prospect com"mands a close-built, high-piled City "stretching itself out beneath in a form "which, to a romantic imagination, may be "supposed to represent that of a dragon; "now a noble arm of the sea, with its rocks, "isles, distant shores, and a boundary of "mountains; and now a fair and fertile "country, varied with hill, dale, and rock, "and sheltered by the picturesque ridge of "the Pentland mountains."

Holyrood Palace is a building of prominent interest. It is a high, four-sided structure, built by King James IV. The Picture Gallery in the Palace is described by Sir Walter Scott as a "long, low, and ill-proportioned apartment, hung with pictures affirmed to be the portraits of Kings, who if they ever flourished at all, lived several hundred years before the invention of painting in oil-colors. In another place Scott speculates on the reason why the Kings should have been each and every one painted with a nose like the knocker of a door. In spite of the above description, however, the painting may be pronounced as good as any of the time in which the work was done. (1648—'86.) Lord Darnley's Rooms contain several pictures, one of which is that of the great Reformer, John Knox. In Queen Mary's Rooms are an old bed, tapestry work, &c., said to have been used by that unfortunate woman.—When we look at the records of departed grandeur, and think of what scenes these walls were once the witnesses of, we feel the truth of that part of Hamlet's speech where he says:

"Ah, fair ladies, how pleasant were "this life of yours if it should ever abide, "and then in the end we might pass "to Heaven with all this gay gear! But "fie on thee, knave Death, that will come "whether ye will or not; and when he hath "laid on the arrest, then fowl worms will "be busy with the flesh, be it never so fair "and tender, and the silly soul, I fear, shall "be so feeble that it can neither carry with "it gold, garnishing, tapestry, pearls, nor "precious stones."

In the passage way to what is termed the ante-room are to be seen dark spots, which are said to be the blood of the Italian, Riccio, Music-teacher to Queen Mary, who was butchered at this place.

There is a suit of Rooms in the Palace at all times for the use of the reigning Sovereign. Also, apartments for the Dukes of Hamilton and Argyle.

Prom ding up Canongate we pass the house where the horrid crimes were perpetrated by the infamous Hare, and the wicked accomplice whose name has added another word to our language, Burk. So great is the public execration of the deeds committed in the place that till this time it is uninhabited by any known being.

On High Street we view the scene of the shocking catastrophe which occurred last year, when a building of ten storeys high fell, burying a great number of persons in the ruins. A new "land" is in course of erection on the same site, on the front of which is a sculpture, in stone, of a lad's face and shoulders, and a scroll surrounding it with the words "Pu' awa' lads, I'm no dead yet." This is all that will commemorate the sad event.

Next in Britain to the Tower of London, it bears the greatest appearance of military activity. In every direction, and at every turn, are to be seen soldiers, and the guns on the walls give the place a formidable appearance. During the forenoon the military bands performed delightful music. From the point called the half-moon Battery a beautiful birds-eye view of the City is obtained. Near the Bomb Battery stands the famous gun "Mons Meg." This antique piece of ordnance is made of hooped iron, measures 13 feet in length, is 20 feet at muzzle, and is supposed to have been forged about the middle of the 15th century. In the Crown Room are shown the Scottish Regalia, but as it is only open at certain hours of the day we had no chance of seeing it.

Printing and publishing are the principal trades of the City. The number of Schools and Universities rank this City as one of the first seats of learning in the world.

Conspicuous among the handsome and grand structures, are the Churches, one of which—the High (Established)—is occupied by Rev. Dr. David Arnott, who is brother to Mr. Wm. Arnott, Chief Constable of your Town.

To do full justice to this City would take more of your space than I am sure you, Mr. Editor, can spare, and so I must close.

GALASHIELS.

Forty miles south of Edinburgh, on the North British Railway, is the Town of Galashiels, which we had occasion to visit. This place is famed for its manufacture of tweeds, the proximity of the River Tweed probably giving rise to the name of that description of cloths. Through the kindness of the manager we had the pleasure of inspecting the extensive establishment of Messrs. Cochrane & Co. This firm took prizes for some of their cloths at the International Exhibition this year.

In company with friends we proceeded, during the afternoon, to the late estate and residence of Sir Walter Scott, distant from Galashiels about two miles. We crossed the Tweed at a point near the Town, where a big, blooming Scotch lass was in waiting to row passengers

ABBOTSFORD,

"O'er the ferry."

The Abbotsford estate is in good repair; many improvements have been made by the present occupant, a distant relation of Sir Walter's. The library in the house is said to be the largest private library in the Country, and in a case and hung around the room are many antiquities and curiosities, most of them having been presented to Scott. On the West gable is the iron gate which was forced by the Porteous mob, when the old Tolbooth at Edinburgh was broken open. In the front is a sculpture in stone of a favorite dog. Retracing our steps we reached Galashiels about sun-set. Early on the following morning we set out on foot for distant 3 miles. As we proceeded along the road the far-stretching hills of Eildon lay before us. No wonder that this country should have been the home of poets—the birth-place of a Scott, a Thomson, a Hogg, and a Ramsay—for a more enchanting country we never cast eyes on. As we approached Melrose we were surprised by the large droves of sheep which we met, tended by the experienced shepherd, and his wise old "Collie" dog which seemed to know every sheep in the flock as well as his master. We afterwards learned that Lammas Fair (one of the largest sheep fairs in Scotland) was being held that day.

There is little to notice in Melrose but the ancient Abbey, which was undoubtedly at one time a grand building. It is now nearly in ruins; the ivy has grasped it in its embrace, and there is little else to be seen now but defaced stone representations of saints, and the Evangelists, placed there by the monks. The defacing was mostly done by the forces of Oliver Cromwell. There are many old figures around the Abbey, one of them being especially comic, viz: that of a pig playing the bag-piper.

After viewing the Abbey we proceeded through the Town to Lammas Fair. An old drover whom we asked how many sheep he thought were on the ground answered us, that he thought there were about "forty thousan' score." The prices for good ewes ranged from 28s to 30s sig., and but few sales, we understand, were effected.

Next letter, embracing notes on the Clyde and the West Highlands, will probably be the last at this time from Woman's Rights.

Dear Mr. Editor,—A great deal has been said about Woman's Right's, but I fear the most important have been overlooked. I send you a list of those I think deserving of prominence. Do, a dear creature, have them inserted in your pages, and oblidge yours, etc.

MARTHA HOMESPUN.

A list of Woman's Rights, which have been sadly overlooked.

It is woman's right to stay at home.

—For what other reason did her husband marry her?"

It is woman's right to have her home in order whenever her husband returns from business.

It is woman's rights to be kind and forbearing whenever her husband is annoyed.

It is woman's rights to examine her husband's linen, and see that it wants neither mending nor buttons.

It is woman's rights to be satisfied with old dresses until her husband is able to buy her new ones.

It is woman's rights to be content when her husband declares himself unable to take her to the sea side.

It is woman's right to nurse her children, instead of leaving it to a maid.

It is woman's rights to get her daughters married—happily, or not at all.

It is woman's rights to feel pleased when her husband brings a friend unexpected to dinner.

It is woman's rights to be content with her own garments, without encroaching on those of her husband.

And finally, it is a woman's right to remain a woman, without endeavouring to be a man.

Peterborough Examiner.

THURSDAY OCTOBER 2, 1862.

PETERBOROUGH AND PORT HOPE

A short time since, we referred to the very unjust conduct of our Legislature, in passing a Bill whereby a number of persons were liable to pay for Stock in a Railroad which was never heard of till long after they had subscribed. We also noticed, the conduct of two leading men in Port Hope, in becoming judgment creditors, taking advantage of this objectionable legislation and suing those persons for the amount they subscribed in another Company; and we wound up with an expression of our opinion on our connection with the Town of Port Hope. Our remarks have called forth the communication of our correspondent "X," and a laconic hint from the Port Hope Guide, that we do the Town he represents an injustice in blaming it in place of the individuals who called forth our remarks.

Our correspondent, sets out to correct us, for entertaining hard thoughts of Port Hope, and undertakes to vindicate that Town from the charges made against it. No one will dispute but that he has heaped a deal of odium upon a certain family compact therein, but we think in doing so he has not wholly exonerated the Town from the grave charges it lies under. Our cotemporary the Guide in referring to the remarks of the several municipalities, on the conduct of his Town hints by his quotation from Shakespeare, that it is in danger of losing its "good name." The first thought that occurred to us on reading his article was the impossibility of its losing what it never possessed. And we would in passing recur to the old proverb "what everybody says must be true." We can assure our cotemporary, that as far as we are concerned we have no desire, to do or say anything wrongfully to injure Port Hope or indeed any person or place. If in our recording facts or stating sober truth, we appear to let fall some heavy metal, all we can say is "stand from under." "The truth may be blamed but can't be shamed" We made some severe remarks upon the unhappy connection which has existed between Port Hope and Peterborough, to which the Guide takes exception, and suggests a reconsideration of our accusation.

Possibly our cotemporary is not "posted up" in the business relations of the two Towns, and therefore we shall give a resume of these for his benefit, as well as to convince him that we have not crossed the line of justice in saying all we did on the subject heretofore.

We wish to correct a misprint of our cotemporary in quoting our article. We did not say that Port Hope was lost to "honesty and dishonor, but lost to honesty and honor. Now for the proof—we begin by observing that the Town of Port Hope is the natural front and outlet of Peterboro, that a rival Town exists seven miles to the East of the former Town; that it has always been considered of vital importance to both the frontier Towns, to secure the carrying trade of Peterborough. Prior to the era of Railroads, Port Hope was some 7 miles nearer Peterborough than Cobourg—a serious consideration in favour of Port Hope, when wagons had to bring all the goods to and from the front. This advantage was felt here as well as at Port Hope, but such was invariably the ill treatment experienced at the Port Hope wharf by business men here, that several of them had their goods landed at Cobourg where they were always well used, though costing them extra in teaming. No one here that has had business in Port Hope but has had to submit to exorbitant wharf charges, to vexatious delays in forwarding goods outwards and inwards, and although repeated grumbling and complaints were made, no attempt was made by the people of Port Hope to remedy the evils complained of, till the Cobourg people broke ground for their Railway to Peterborough. They then began to think that it was something serious to lose the trade of Peterborough, and they immediately apply to Parliament to get the Charter of the Peterborough and Port Hope Company so amended that branches could be made here and there.

A deputation then comes out to Peterborough who canvass most earnestly for our assistance to aid them in a Railroad direct from Port Hope to Peterborough. It was declined of course as Cobourg was coming out with its road, as fast as it could be made. A deputation from the latter place had come out previously and said "Gentlemen, we come not to ask you to take stock in our Road or for your pecuniary assistance, we ask merely leave to come to your Town." Although still preferring connection with Port Hope, as it would be reached on terra firma, we deemed it madness to have two Railroads coming in from the West to Peterborough; so did not the deputation, and on our declining to join them in their pet scheme, they vowed vengeance upon us, and a leading member of that deputation whose name we could mention was overheard saying that we should suffer for this yet. Then followed the Act of the Port Hope, Lindsay & Beaverton Railway Company, which brings in all the original Stock holders, and the sufferers are the men who desired to benefit the Town and Country by a direct Road to Port Hope—not for a Road from Port Hope to Lindsay.

Now we would ask our cotemporary of the Guide, to tell us, how those rapacious individuals James Smith and William Fraser became judgment creditors of the Railroad Company? and of what is in the large claim of nearly £9000 composed?

Is it not chiefly for money advanced by them to pay the £10,000 Stock subscribed by the Town of Port Hope in the Millbrook Branch? And in borrowing this money, did not the Town Council hypothecate its Harbour Debentures, to secure the re-payment of the money so advanced.

That owing to some illegality in the proceedings, these Debentures could not be used by the above parties who loaned the money? And did not the Town apply to Chancery to get those Debentures back? And when efforts were made to get Parliament to legalize the negotiation of said Debentures, did not the Town send down its Mayor and a deputation to oppose interference?

We could adduce more but we forbear. We have we think shown that Port Hope is as much to blame in even this last and worst transaction as the two cold heartless creditors who are wrenching the portion left to the widows and orphans from them, for the simple reason that they can do it. We should like to give these a wide berth in a dark night, if we chanced to have money about us. We do blame the leading men of Port Hope, and only regret we are not in a position to have nothing more to do with them. We sincerely hope the rumour is true that a Road is coming around the lake to connect us with Cobourg. We shall part company with a Town like Port Hope without shedding a tear—a Town we repeat that is "lost to honesty and honor."

Since writing the above, one of the victims of the judgment creditors came into our office desirous to dispose of her interest in a piece of land, to raise money to meet the amount she is sued for. She is a widow with a family, has but scanty means to live but must meet this demand. If the Town Council of Port Hope owes these hard hearted rapacious creditors, we entreat our cotemporary to urge it to satisfy these ravenous men sufficient to keep them off from the widows and orphans. Men guilty of such acts are as cruel as the grave, and it would be a just retribution were their widows and orphans served as they are serving others.

"To him that no mercy shows,
No mercy shall be shown."

The Town Council met on Monday night present His Worship the Mayor; Messrs. Toole, Stevenson, Fry, Lawson, Chamberlain, Reid, Cumming, Bradfield and Dickson.

Several accounts were referred to Finance Committee.

The Mayor stated that he had been frequently spoken to about a side walk to the Court House, and one from the Railway Depot, and he wished to call the attention of the Council to the matter.

Several petitions for repairs on sidewalks and streets were referred to the Committee on Streets and Bridges.

A report from the Finance Committee recommending the rate to be 13 cents in the dollar, as the taxes for the present year was submitted, and after a good deal of discussion it was received and adopted.

A By-law was then introduced and passed for striking the rate, which was fixed at 14 cents in the $.

A By-law was read a first time for amending By-Law No. 2.

The Street and Bridge Committee were requested to report at the next meeting the amount of their expenditure.

It was resolved that Martin McDonald be appointed night watch, so soon as a majority of the rate payers living between Brock Street and Charlotte and between Brock Street and the Otonabee River, agree to defray the reasonable expense of the same, and the above limits be his beat, said expense to be raised by local tax on that beat; or in other words it is no appointment at all.

The Council then adjourned to next Monday night at 7 p. m.

FIRE.—Mr. Charles Taylor who has rented the farm of Mr. John Rice Lake, had all his crops destroyed, together with the barns, stables and out houses, destroyed by fire on Saturday night last. Strong suspicions are entertained that the fire was the work of an incendiary, and we learn that Mr. Taylor has applied for a warrant to arrest an individual whose strange conduct at and after the fire aroused suspicion. We are sorry to learn that Mr. Taylor had no insurance, as his loss is very heavy. He had in the barn the production of 40 acres of wheat, and about 450 bushels threshed, the produce of 10 acres of oats, 12 acres of fall rye, 16 acres of peas, 6 acres of hay. He lost besides the most of his farming implements, and a number of serviceable articles.

The body of a boy, name unknown, was found floating in Mr. Hughson's dam on Monday last, he was four and a half feet in height, coarse hazy hair, cut very short, had on a pair of dark tweed pants and a white shirt, but neither shoes nor stockings. An inquest was held on the body by Dr. A. Harvey, Coroner, when the jury returned a verdict of "found drowned," there being no marks of violence on the body.

A FEW days ago we learned that Colonel Haultain had received a telegram that the Governor General was to visit Peterboro'. He has since been notified that owing to unforseen circumstances His Excellency will not be here at this time.

"THE VICTORIA JUDGESHIP.—We hear that James Smith Esq., has received this appointment. He is a clear headed lawyer and will make an excellent Judge."—Review Telegram.

A clear grit and a purist able to make an "excellent judge," our cotemporary is surely turning round again. We hope some more just and merciful individual will obtain the office than the merciless creditor of the Port Hope, Lindsay & Beaverton Railway Company.

AN old house near the Otonabee Bridge, owned by S. Dickson, Esq., was burned down on Saturday night. We hear that Mr. Dickson was insured.

Our Agricultural Show is held to-day; we believe it is one of the best we have yet had.

We copy to-day some prizes awarded to individuals in Port Hope and Cobourg at the late Provincial Exhibition. We regret at not finding any names from this town and neighborhood.

The demand that comes from certain parties in Upper Canada, for the immediate dismissal of functionaries appointed by the late government is neither reasonable nor safe. If it were deemed expedient to adopt the principle which has prevailed under party government amongst our neighbors, and to make a clean sweep of the field covered by the patronage of the Administration, the proposal summarily to dismiss a number of officials appointed under obnoxious circumstances, would be intelligible and fair. The rule, that "to the victos be long the spoils," would then receive a literal application, and as all parties would in turn profit by it, none could complain of its enforcement. This is a policy, however, which few amongst us desire to introduce into the province. For the most part, we are content to prolong the system based upon British precedent, and to abstain from visiting upon appointees punishment for the sins perpetrated by the political party by whom they were appointed. If an office is found to be useless, there should be no compunction about its abolition.—If an officer is negligent or otherwise inefficient, there should be no hesitancy in removing him. And if offices become legitimately vacant, there should be a distinct understanding that they will be filled by friends of the party in power. Beyond this, is it prudent or right to proceed? We think not. For, in the first place, there is no general disposition to revolutionize the system under which appointments have been held. And, in the next place, if the government to-day dismisses individuals solely because they were the nominees of the party now in opposition, a precedent will be established, from which the friends of the present ministry will, in due season, suffer. The equitable plan is to adhere to the wholesome British rule, and in the end this will be the best for all parties.

The North Waterloo (Upper Canada) registry office affords a case that is applicable as an illustration. The creation of the office was undeniably a partisan job.—The convenience of the county did not require a division; the feeling of the residents was almost unanimously against it; and it was carried out for no other purpose than to annoy political opponents and to serve a political adherent. On every ground, it is proper to abolish the office, and to restore the registry office of the county to its original position. But the law defines the means that shall be employed for this purpose; and they who insist that the government shall at once, and of their own will, abolish the office, simply ask ministers to place themselves above the law. Abolished the office should be; abolished we are confident it will be; but the government must be left to be the judge of the process dictated by law for the accomplishment of the object.

So of other cases about which some of our Western friends are greatly exercised. Because the late Government inflicted wrong, should the present Government do likewise? Because the late Postmaster General abused the privileges of his position, and vented his spite upon the head of an honest man, should the present Postmaster General also abuse his opportunities by injuring another man, equally innocent, and, may hap, equally reputable? The injuries are worthy of careful consideration, and we commend them to friends who appear to be dissatisfied because their own expectations in reference to particular offices have not been gratified. Where public interests demand the necessity of interference, or even of aggressive action, there is no unwillingness on the part of ministers to defer a single day. They have the courage which enables men to fight for their friends, but they have the courage to be just. If wrong has been done, they will try to restore the right, but they must be allowed to obey the dictates of their own responsible judgment, rather than the behests of irresponsible advisers.—Quebec Mercury.

Crown Lands.

(From the Quebec Morning Chronicle.)

From the diversified administration of the Crown Lands, from the incessant tinkering of its ordinances, and from the undue influences brought to bear upon or to restrain the action of the department, the Commissioner must always find embarrassment in any, however desirable, innovation. The difficulty this officer would experience in the performance of so stern a duty as that we are about to suggest will, we fear, prevent the present and any future Commissioners from an undertaking fraught with no slight responsibility.

It is not perhaps, publicly known, at least, with no degree of accuracy that the default to the Crown Lands Department is enormous. The defaults are of two classes—the speculators and the settlers. The first are those who hold lands for the purpose of a sale at profit. The latter class are those who are bona fide residents upon the land purchased. Both of these classes have bought upon the usual terms of sale. These terms have been variable, but mostly at ten years, by yearly instalments. In almost all the cases of speculation the first instalment, made at the time of purchase, is the only payment that has been made. Many of these purchases were made six, eight ten and even twelve years ago; the interest thereof in some instances equals the original cost. In like manner, but in a somewhat minor proportion, the settlers' arrears have also accumulated to a serious amount. The magnitude of this defalcation caused Mr. Vankoughnet to publish an order in Council, giving notice that all arrears for Crown Lands must be paid by 1st January 1860, under penalty of forfeiture. This edict had the effect of alarming the settlers; but the speculators took it for just what it was worth; they knew full well that the threat of confiscation was all bosh—that the Commissioner would not venture upon a scheme that would render him unpopular with a class of persons who were not without influence in the constituencies. The consequences were that the poor and honest settler who had improved his land became alarmed, and many of the more anxious, to avoid what they believed to be their ruin, rushed into that what made it certain, raising the necessary funds by mortgage, and other costly loans. Such was the mode of dealing with the defaulters—the honest and worthy were punished, while those, for whom simple justice and no favor was the proper course, came off without interference, or the slightest pressure. We have reason to know that, at the time to which we have reference, the amount of arrears for Crown Lands was, in round numbers, six millions of dollars. By a careful analysis of this amount it is discoverable that about two-thirds or four millions were due by speculators, and that the lands held by them exceed two million acres. The balance of the lands being somewhere in the neighbourhood of one and a half million of acres, with a defaulting balance of two millions of dollars, is to be debited to the settlers. We feel perfectly assured that the public have not the slightest idea of the magnitude of this daily increasing arrearage.

It is perfect folly to suppose that payment for the lands held for speculation, upon which the arrears and accumulated interest far exceed the value, will ever be made by parties whose only object is a derivable profit. Why, then, should these lands not be resumed by the Crown? Why not adopt some equitable mean of adjusting these long standing accounts? The finances of the Province are in the most unsatisfactory state, and here is a sum due the country which could be made available either by a prompt collection of the arrears, or by a resumption and resale of the lands. Such a course would bring forward some of the finest lands in Canada, which are now withheld from settlement. The Government have now little land left of a character make its cultivation desirable, or in local tions likely to tempt settlers. The resumption of a million acres of these lands would really be a boon, and we can see no good reason why their should be the slightest hesitation in the Commissioner availing himself of the opportunity. Surely the risk of a little abuse from the land jobbers could cause no greater inconvenience than the plaints of the heedless Indian. True, there are Parliamentary majorities to secure which the wrongs of the red man would not be likely to affect, while the lobbies could be made resonant with the murmurs of the speculator.

A DARING LEAP.—An extraordinary feat was perpetrated on Thursday by a man living in Evergreen Street. It appears that for some time past he had been on the "spree," and came home in such a "glorious" condition that his wife deemed it prudent to leave him to himself, and she accordingly, when he fell asleep, left the house, locking the door of her room after her. After sleeping for some hours the man awoke, thirsting for another dram; but finding his better half had so far as she could, secured him, he set his ingenuity to work to effect his "escape." The only mode of exit for him was through the window, and, lighting his pipe, he, with the greatest composure jumped down into the street, a height of over twenty feet. He alighted in perfect safety, the only thing injured being his pipe, which, by the concussion, had the bowl knocked off, leaving the stem in his mouth.—Cork Constitution.

For the Examiner.

From Our Ottawa Correspondent.

BANKS OF THE OTTAWA,
Sept., 23, 1862.

Dear Examiner,—The part of Canada included in the Eastern Division is just passing through the ordeal of an election for a member to the Legislative Council. All is quiet in this vicinity but considerable enthusiasm prevails—quiet because neither candidate (wisely) spends money, enthusiastic for the reason, religion is the ground work of action. The gentlemen aspiring to the honor of representing the Division are Dr. McDonald, of Cornwall, who pursues his Medical profession, and is Treasurer of Stormont, Dundas, and Glengarry—in religious faith a Catholic; and Mr. Thos. Bennett, of Athol, who is an honest farmer of independent means, hails from the great City of London, but has lived so long among the Mass, and is allied to them by marriage, so that likely he suffers nothing on national grounds, especially being otherwise a worthy man and an Elder in the Free Church. The Dr. swallows at one gulp the entire fare of the present Ministerial dish. Mr. Bennett advocates representation by population, and is adverse to Separate Schools.

A few days will decide who stands best,—the man of the plough, or he of the healing art. Agriculturists, otherwise qualified, are desirable men to send to Parliament. We have already law, physic, and commerce fully represented; ace is divinity altogether overlooked. A strange choice however, for the "Legate of the skies"—a mighty descent from proclaiming the Gospel to be a debater in the Assembly. And stranger still that a man should be too old and weak to whisper "the still small voice" of Redemption, and yet adequate to defend the tottering fortunes of a corrupt Administration. In this like his faith that shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day? Surely a minister in Parliament is a man out of place, and if too old to do the duties of the pulpit he is too old to pass his nights in the bickering turmoil of the Legislature.

It is not unusual for men to carry with them into the duties of legislation the mannerism and the cast of thought and action peculiar to their previous profession in life, and what smacks of the parson supplies irreverent fun for too many of our lawmakers and exposes to ridicule the highest office a mortal can occupy in this world—being an ambassador of Heaven.

The soldier-legislator requires to keep guard against the tendencies of professional habit, or an evil of another kind will mar his labors so great is the disparity between martial and civil law.

A few examples in proof of the sayings and doings of a veteran who resides within the precincts of the Eastern Division may not be uninteresting.

Our friend occupied a seat in the Assembly of Upper Canada at a period when the political feelings of the people were stirred to the bottom. He hails from the Emerald Isle—dates his existence back to the period of the American Revolution—followed the fortunes of Sir John Moore in Spain, and fought under the Iron Duke through the Peninsular War—was specially named for acts of bravery during his military career, and promoted from the ranks to a Lieutenancy. The years immediately following Waterloo brought many old warriors to Canada, and among them our gallant hero.

Honors awaited him: Colonel of Militia and Justice of the Peace were followed by a seat in Parliament. The professional tendencies of the Colonel became mocked in the exercise of the duties of his several offices.

In making speeches pith, brevity and steel characterized his eloquence. In magisterial matters summary punishment was his delight, and summary proceedure in cases foreign to the power of a Magistrate his besetting sin. For instance, one party was summoned for a breach of promise, another fined for not paying the Priest for christening his child, and another for shooting a dog on Monday that had bitten him on Sunday previous. Addressing the guilty party his Worship said:

"Hsir, under the influence of passion you had shot the dumb brute immediately the case would have been different; but forgetful of the divine injunction that commands us not to let the sun go down upon our wrath, you murdered the poor dog. I shall fine you sir, with costs, twelve dollars."

Under the Master and Servants' act some parties were imprisoned who were clearly innocent, but our Soldier justice declared disobedience of orders, under any circumstances, was a flagrant breach of the articles of war, and he would make an example of this kind of defaulters. Narrow escapes the Colonel had of being fined for his summary illegal acts, but friends at Court saved him, although in the case of the man not paying the Priest a brother Magistrate was a loser of forty pounds for false imprisonment; notwithstanding he was ably defended by the present Premier of Canada, and only finished what the Colonel began.

Our friend was a member of the House at the close of the rebellion. How Col. Prince would be received on his first entrance after that period (for reasons well known) was doubtful, but no sooner did the Member for Prescott observe the presence of "the English gentleman" than he raised a cheer that quieted for a time what should be a guilty conscience.

The question soon arose at whose expense those condemned to banishment should be sent to Van Demans land, the Provincial or Imperial Government.

"Mr. Speaker," said our hero, "In my opinion there is no necessity for either Government to be at greater expense than the cost of so many ball-cartridges as will send the miscreants where they ought to go."

The disposal of the Clergy Reserves soon after came up and occupied and excited the House for some weeks. In the opinion of some the very existence of religion depended upon State support—others regarded it anoilation to take the Reserves from that Church to which a King of pious memory had given them—more agreed that two Churches being established in Britain each of these had an equal right—another reasoned as there was no Church established in Canada all should share alike. Many maintained each Church should be left to support itself and the Reserves secularized. The gallant Colonel, ever ready to give a reason for his opinion, arose,

"Mr. Speaker I am most anxious to give my views on this important subject, and to indicate how I am prepared to record my vote. There are, sir, four leading ways of going to heaven. There is the way which I myself am travelling, that supplied by the Catholic Church; the other ways are the ugh the Church of England, that of Scotland and the Methodist Church. Any person unwilling to go to heaven on one or other of these ways deserves to go elsewhere and fare accordingly. I go therefore for dividing the Reserves among these four Churches."

The destruction of Brock's Monument aroused the indignation of the land. A great assembly was gathered on the Heights to give expression to their indignation.—Then portion of Canada was represented by our friend who concluded a right loyal speech as follows:

"Your Excellency this is the proudest day of my life, and I anticipate but one more proud, and that day shall be when at the head of a Militia force I shall march into that land of pretended liberty and revenge the insult done to the ashes of the immortal Brock."

Adieu Colonel, thy earthly warfare is nearly ended. The grasshopper is becoming a burden and desire faileth. Fifty four ways of reaching the Celestial City are reduced to one, and that "the way, the truth, and the life," happy shall they be to what soever Church belonging. One unfortunate failing in our friend just dismissed: he could see nothing good outside the Queen's dominions, and a people without a Church established was infidel—alas, in this he is not alone.

A writer signing himself "Reformer," in your issue of 11th inst., calls Canada to a Public Fast that the people "may consider their ways." Doubtless inwardly they have sufficient cause, but would not a day of thanksgiving better, seeing we have "peace within our walls and prosperity within our Palaces." "Reformer," have you not chosen a wrong name? Is not your mind wandering in the darkness of Church and Statism? What do you mean by such language as the following? "The late United States are in trouble because though there may be many good people in them, the Nation is ungodly in its Government from the President to its whole body. It is an infidel nation and does not recognize God—the God of all the nations of the earth." Pray, what constitutes a Godly Government, and which nation on this wide earth possesses one? Does Monarchy secure this blessing, or is an established Church requisite to its possession? If the latter Russia, Prussia, Austria and France each possess the boon. May the human race be preserved from such Godliness. Does our own dear country possess a Godly Government where prayers must have the sanction of Parliament and Bishops are made by the Premier, and the Sovereign is head of the Church? Let the past history of Great Britain answer?

Look at the system of persecutions and disabiliti s that have followed in the track of establishments, the monstrous practice of dictating what a man is to believe, and submitting him to pains and penalties if he refuses.

Let this century of an event when 200 years ago, two thousand ministers, the most distinguished for piety and learning were in one day ejected from their churches, and for what? because they could not and would not do and say things contrary to their consciences. Let this event speak to the advantage and goodness of rulers intermeddling in matters spiritual. The goodness of the people of any nation is irrespective of the government, and generally in spite of it. There have been good men members of all the governments referred to, and will be deny this of the States? On what ground then does he call it an infidel nation? Friend, you are guilty of slander—you bear false witness against your neighbor, and have cause to repent and humble yourself while you call others to this duty. Will you please inform us in what way the Government of the States is infidel more than other nations? Do they as a Government deny God? they do not. The principles of their common law as are those of Britain are founded on the Bible. Their officials from the President downwards are installed to office by an appeal to the great Being. Chaplains are appointed for their Houses of Legislature, their Navy and Army, and they do all and everything in matters of religion usually done in what are called christian nations apart from having an establishment. Wherefore then are they to be denominated infidel? Is their form of Government the reason? The world is too old to listen to the divine right of Kings. It is the divine right of the people to choose their form of civil government and enact their own laws, as long as these do not oppose the law of heaven, and the business of a Government is to administer those laws (as they should every thing else) to the fear of God; but leave matters of faith and church order to the choice and management of the people neither aiding nor hindering (as a government) the interests of religion: these are too sacred for such interference—the ark which may not be touched by such hands—God is king in his own house—is a kingdom not of this world. Territories, reform and retract the foul charge of infidel nation as applied to the States. Many portions of that country will compare with advantage with any country in our world, either in intelligence, education, morality or religion or in the talent and patriotism of its statesmen, the princely liberality of a philanthropist, the deep learning and piety of its ministers, in self-sacrifice of its missionaries. Let the names of Peabody, Everett, Edwards, Wayland, Judson, Adams and Washington, with thousands more, attest to the greatness and goodness, notwithstanding abounding sin that have adorned the people of the States, and say not a nation loved and venerated by such men is an infidel nation.

CLARENCE.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Peterboro', Sept. 22nd, 1862.

DEAR SIR,—Your issue of the 18th inst. contains an article on the subject of the great Smith and Fraser Railway suits, with which I agree in every particular except in regard to your remarks against Port Hope, which remarks are unjust to the great majority of the people of that Town, and I have no doubt when you are informed of all the circumstances, your own sense of justice will compel you to admit it.

In the first place the largest portion of the private stock subscribed, was subscribed by persons in and immediately about Port Hope, and every one of these Stockholders who were worth the money have been compelled by these same "rapacious gentry," as you correctly call them, to pay up in the same manner that they have compelled the residents of Peterborough to do. There is no doubt but that the management of the Railway on the part of those who managed it in Port Hope has never been otherwise than to justify your remarks, but the people of Port Hope are not responsible for this. The management of the Railway affairs got into the hands of the Smith family at the commencement, and Port Hope has been sacrificed for the benefit of themselves and their troops of poor relations and hangers on. Every one knows how easy it is to manipulate the transfer of sufficient railway stock to constitute a director of a Railway Board, and they may therefore easily understand how such a Railway Bond as that which controlled the Port Hope and Peterborough, and afterwards the Port Hope, Lindsay and Beaverton Railway Company, was obtained and kept in power. There was a Smith for President, Smith for Solicitor, Smith's brother-in-law for Secretary, another brother-in-law for Chief Engineer and Superintendent, while several young Smiths assumed themselves as Chainbearers &c., under the very vigilant superintendence of the afore mentioned Chief Engineer, and in short no person could procure employment in or about the Railway office unless he bore the very suspicious name of Smith or acknowledged their supremacy. The state of things went on as long as the money lasted, and it went on afterwards, and thus nicely constructed Railway Board ordered the purchase of land for Railway purposes at prices ten times its value—in fact it was valueless until the Railway Company covered it with some feet of earth, yet the Railway Board paid the Smiths as much for it as it would have brought were it good land in the most favorable situation in the Town. First one Smith was voted a salary for his very valuable services as President; then another Smith was, after serving his time, voted a small sum, only a thousand dollars, as a small compensation for the very valuable services he had rendered the Company. In the meantime the act was passed—no one knew anything about it for months after it was too late to take advantage of it except the chosen friends of the men who procured its passage—Mr. James Smith. They now say it was a law of the province, and every man is bound to know the law; this is true, but we all know that the statutes are not published and distributed for two or three months after they become law, and how therefore could the unfortunate Stockholders take advantage of the clause which only gave them one month from the passage of the act to avail themselves of its provisions? To me the whole matter looks like a premeditated scheme to make money out of men who never received the slightest value therefor. The judgments upon which these parties are suing were recovered against the Company by default, after this manner Mr. James Smith sues the Railway Company of which John Shuter Smith is President, and the present Mayor of Port Hope, whose impertinent remarks you quote, was a member and a tool of the President. He includes in his claim the claims of several friends assigned to him. The Railway Company consider the suit, and it is agreed that there is no use in defending it; some Director who objects is silenced by the statement that the judgment is not worth much as the Company have no goods or other property out of which the money can be made the judgment is obtained and is also safe lie until a convenient opportunity. Your remarks inform me that the opportune time has arrived. The actions you refer to were brought and judgments obtained by no more creditable process than I have described, and I am satisfied that the perpetrators will merit their reward. In Port Hope as well as in Peterborough and every Town or Township where there is a Stockholder of the Road their names will be execrated, they alone are to blame; the men they sued were never allowed a voice in the management or control of the Road, and yet they compel them to pay for it.—Yourself probably say why allow these men to control the Road if they acted in this way? Were my letter not so long already I could show how impossible it was after they once got control to find out what they did until it was too late, in the meantime I may say that the large majority of the people of Port Hope have no other desire but to act honestly and fairly by the people of Peterboro, and that they are not to blame for the course that has been pursued towards us.

I am yours truly,

X.

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States beforementioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurance during the year, contained in 1189 Proposal	£434,835 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 981 Policies were issued	359,690 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS on said Policies	11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPAT ON POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees	22,999 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assured under 4,759 current LIFE POLICIES	1,955,95 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS	373,563 3 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE	96,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report States that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq, Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his cent re approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the office rates are based, amounting to £93,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 16s 7d, to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next inve tigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £217,821 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinised in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realized on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured; that the total additions to the sum assured, how vest d, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured: and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 75 per cent of the premiums paid.

FIRE INSURANCE.

THE following table compiled from the official returns, exhibits, at a glance, the increase of duty paid to the Government by the different Insurance Offices, metropolitan and provincial, during the year 1861.

THE "ROYAL,"

It will be seen, stands as before, at the very head of the list, and maintains a rate of progress very far in advance of all its rivals and competitors. Twelve months ago, we had the gratification of recording the fact that its increase, in the year 1860, had been more than double that of any other company—had exceeded 30 per cent., of the entire increase of all the London offices combined—and had, also exceeded 30 per cent, of the aggregate increase of the remaining twenty eight provincial offices. We have now the pleasure of inviting the attention of our readers to the testimony of these later returns, which show that in the year 1861, the increase of the "Royal" was very nearly sixty per cent, in excess of the increase of any other company—that there were but three offices which came even within fifty per cent. of it, and that it was actually more than one-sixth of the entire increase of the remaining forty-four offices, London and Provincial put together. Comment upon such facts as these would be superfluous They prove, unmistakeably, the continued advance of the "Royal" in the confidence and good opinion of the public. That advance has been, from its beginning, as remarkable as it has been rapid; and we cordially congratulate the directors and shareholders upon it, because we regard it as the just reward of prudent management, of liberal and honorable dealing, and of undoubted stability

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen Friday, the 18th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair. There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States before-mentioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurance during the year, contained in 1189 Proposal	£454,835 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 981 Policies were issued	359,680 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS on said Policies	11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPATON POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees	22,999 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assured under 6,759 current LIFE POLICIES	1,955,95 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULAED FUNDS	373,563 3 2
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE	90,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report States that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his cent re approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This step the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the office rates are based, amounting to £93,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, thus leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,427 16s 7d., to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £217,821 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinised in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realized on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 1s 6d per cent or annum for the Quinquennial period was declared, on the sums originally assured under all Policies participating therein, increased by the previous additions thereto; also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured; that the total additions to the sum assured, how vest d, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured; and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 75 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

FIRE INSURANCE.

THE following table compiled from the official returns, exhibits, at a glance, the increase of duty paid to the Government by the different Insurance Offices, metropolitan and provincial, during the year 1861.

THE "ROYAL."

It will be seen, stands as before, at the very head of the list, and maintains a rate of progress very far in advance of all its rivals and competitors. Twelve months ago, we had the gratification of recording the fact that its increase, in the year 1860, had been more than double that of any other company—had exceeded 30 per cent, of the entire increase of all the London offices combined—and had, also exceeded 20per cent, of the aggregate increase of the remaining twenty eight provincial offices. We have now the pleasure of inviting the attention of our readers to the testimony of these later returns, which show that in the year 1861, the increase of the "Royal" was very nearly sixty per cent, in excess of the increase of any other company—that there were but three offices which came even within fifty per cent. of it, and that it was actually more than one-sixth of the entire increase of the remaining forty-four offices, London and Provincial put together. Comment upon such facts as these would be superfluous. They prove, unmistakeably, the continued advance of the "Royal" in the confidence and good opinion of the public. That advance has been, from its beginning, as remarkable as it has been rapid; and we cordially congratulate the directors and shareholders upon it, because we regard it as the just reward of prudent management, of liberal and honorable dealing, and of undoubted stability.

Poetry.

"MY WIFE AND CHILD."

[A correspondent, "Southron," sends us the following, with a request for its publication in our columns. It is from the pen of the famous "Stonewall" Jackson written while he was with the United States army in Mexico, of which army he was then as he is now of the Confederate, a brave and efficient officer. Our correspondent thinks Gen. Jackson must be accorded the merit of a true poet. The pathos of poetry and true affection were never more justly delineated.]—Leader.

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
But sleep my weary eyes hath flown
And sad, uneasy thoughts arise.

I think of thee, oh, dearest one,
Whose love my early life hath blest—
Of thee and him—our baby son—
Who slumbers on thy gentle breast;
God of the tender, frail and lone,
Oh, guard the gentle sleeper's rest.

And hover, gently hover near
To her, whose watchful eye is wet—
To mother, wife—the doubly dear,
In whose young heart have freshly met
Two streams of love so deep and clear—
And cheer her drooping spirits yet.

Now, while she kneels before Thy throne,
Oh, teach her, Ruler of the skies,
That while by Thy behest alone
Earth's mightiest powers fall or rise,
No tear is wept to Thee unknown,
No hair is lost, no sparrow dies!

That thou can't stay the restless hands
Of dark disease, and soothe its pain;
That only by Thy stern commands
The battle's lost, the soldier's slain—
That from the distant sea or land
Thou bring'st the wanderer home again.

And when upon her pillow lone
Her tear-wet cheek is sadly pressed,
May happier visions beam upon
The brightning currents of her breast—
No frowning look nor angry tone,
Disturb the Sabbath of her rest.

Whatever fate those forms may show,
Loved with a passion almost wild—
By day—by night—in joy or woe—
By fears oppressed, or forms beguiled,
From every danger, every foe,
Oh, God! protect my wife and child!

THOMAS JEFFERSON JACKSON.

Miscellaneous.

The War in Kentucky.

There is nothing interesting in the papers respecting the war in Kentucky. Both the Federal and Confederate armies appear to be quiescent, although the latter may be making movements in the interior of the States which are of course unknown to their enemies.

THE SHOOTING OF GEN. NELSON.

The following additional particulars of the murder, for such it is, of Gen. Nelson are forwarded by a Louisville correspondent:—

"There are many conflicting accounts of the shooting of General Nelson by Gen. Davis. About a week ago Nelson placed Davis in command of the Home Guard forces. At night Davis reported to Nelson the number of men working on the intrenchments and enrolled for service. Nelson cursed him for not having more. Davis replied that he was a general officer and demanded the treatment of a gentleman. Nelson, in an insulting manner, ordered him to report at Cincinnati, and told him he would order the Provost-Marshal to eject him from the city. This morning, Governor Morton, of Indiana, and Gen. Nelson, were standing near the desk in the Galt House, when Gen. Davis approached, and requested Gov. Morton to witness a conversation between himself and Gen. Nelson. He demanded of Nelson an apology for the rude treatment he had received last week. Nelson being a little deaf, asked him to speak louder. Davis again demanded an apology. Nelson denounced him and slapped him in the face. Davis stepped back, clenched his fist and again demanded an apology. Nelson slapped him in the face, and again denounced him as a coward.—Davis turned away, procured a pistol from a friend, and followed Nelson who was going up stairs. Davis told Nelson to defend himself, immediately thereon firing. The ball penetrated his left breast, and Gen. Nelson died in about twenty minutes. Gen. Nelson requested to see his old friend Rev. Mr. Talbot, Rector of Calvary Episcopal Church, who was then at the Galt House. Mr. Talbot administered the sacrament according to the forms of his Church. The General repeated the service after the minister, and refused to talk on any other subject. He regretted that he had not long ago turned his attention to religion."

The following paragraph, which we find in the Indianapolis Journal undoubtedly explains the cause of the difficulty that led to the murder. The Journal details the incident in explanation of the statement that Gen. Davis had been relieved of his command. It says:

"Gen. Davis reported to Gen. Nelson that he had the brigade assigned to his command; the citizens of Louisville, ready for service, and desired to know if he could get arms for them. "How many men have you?" asked General Nelson. "About 2,500." "About 2,500! About 2,500!! You a regular officer and report about the number of men at your command. Don't you know, Sir, you should give the exact number?" "But, General," replied Davis, "I didn't expect to get the guns now; I only wanted to learn if I could get them, and where, and having learned that I could ascertain the exact number needed, and then draw them." "About 2,500!" persisted Nelson. "I suspend you from your command, and order you to report to General Wright, and I've a d—d mind to send you out of the city with a Provost-guard."

Gen. Davis, as we learn from Cincinnati, went immediately to that city, to report to Gen. Wright, but, failing to find him there, returned to Louisville. The homicide must have been committed almost immediately after his return to that city.

The New York Tribune thus describes the character of Gen. Nelson:

"The deceased was a brave man and a good subordinate general, but he failed to pay any respect to those courtesies, not to say decencies of life, without which civility and bravery are useless in a military leader. He was blasphemous, indecent and abusive beyond all precedent in his conversation and deportment towards his equals and inferiors in rank. If one-half that is reported of him is true, it is a marvel he was not shot months since. Such a man, no matter what his talents, should not have been permitted to remain in the army a month. He was perpetually violating that most essential of all army regulations which insists on "subordination and obedience." Had he been disciplined for this cause it would have been worth a victory to our armies in the warning it would have been to the mass of our officers, whose discipline in this respect is very defective. As for Davis, though he was grossly insulted, his conduct was that of an assassin, and no doubt he will meet an assassin's fate."

The Impossible Congress.

(From Le Charivari, Paris.)

Everybody is talking of congresses—so let us talk about congresses. The pending difficulties are so intricate, that for want of anything better people have fallen back on this expedition.

Well, I will give my consent to it—but on one condition, viz., that the future congress shall be called "The Impossible Congress."

Impossible, indeed! for it quite amuses me to think of the first scene, which would not be followed by many others.

You will soon see why; for suppose the representatives of Russia, Turkey, Austria, Prussia, England, Italy, France, and Spain assembled in congress to deliberate with full powers.

Russia gets up first.

"Gentlemen, before going any further, I have one thing to say.

"I consent to take part in the congress, but on one condition—that you will not bother yourselves about the affairs of Warsaw.

"Every man's house is his castle, and I intend to stick to this."

Austria gets up.

"Gentlemen, my Sovereign wishes on this occasion to show a yielding and conciliating spirit.

"But there is one thing he is determined on. Venetia is his, and he will keep it; and Hungary is his—and he does not see why he should be done out of it, either.

"You can, therefore, talk as much as you like about Montenegro, Kamschatka, the American war, or anything else you like; but as for the Venito-Hungarian question, it must be understood that it is not to be mentioned."

"Gentlemen," says Turkey, getting up, "the honourable gentleman who spoke last mentioned the name of Montenegro. The name naturally brings me to business.

"The Commander of the Faithful is not one of those retrogressionist princes who have a horror of enlightenment.

"He adores enlightenment, on the contrary.

"Let the lamp of investigation be carried into the innermost recesses of international policy, and scrutinise the darkness of European diplomacy, as much as you like, only please let the Eastern question alone.

"For it is one of those problems not to be solved, like squaring the circle, and perpetual motion.

"Which shows—shows—don't ask any more about it; and on this condition we are quite disposed to give you our opinion on any possible subject."

"Allow me," interrupts Prussia. "Before going any farther, I have also a word to say.

"To tell you the truth, we in Berlin did not particularly relish your congress project; but we did not wish to throw cold water on it.

"Let us understand one another. We will be very yielding, but don't torment us. Our home debates, and the struggle for the presidency of German hegemony, has nothing whatever to do with you.

"This is what must be well understood before the deliberations commence."

"I reserve the Ionian Islands," says England.

"As for the Roman question——"

At these words three representatives get up, the first for Victor Emmanuel the second for Francis II., and the third for the Pope.

"I am Italy," says one.

"I am Italy," says the other.

"I am Italy," says the third.

"No deliberations can take place before the principle of unity is proclaimed," says the first,

"I say the rights of Francis II., are to be reserved; they are beyond all dispute," says the second.

"The temporal power is and must be sheltered from the stormy debates which will arise," says the last.

In the midst of the tumult France rises to interfere.

"Gentlemen, if we are neither to talk about Poland, nor Hungary, nor Venetia, nor the Eastern question, nor Germany, nor the Ionian Islands, nor the Italian unity, nor of anything which is like something, our deliberations may not perhaps have all the interest that might be desired."

"So much the worse! so much the worse!" they cry.

"In that case it would perhaps be better——"

"To disperse."

"What! without commons!

"I have had enough of the congress," says one.

"And I too much!" cries another.

"We shall never understand each other," says a third.

"Don't let us try, then." "I shall be off!" "I break up the meeting!" "I shall dissolve!" "I shall cut!" "I shall evaporate!" "Good-bye!" And after these cries the usher is left in the hall of the congress, to say to himself, as he puts away the pens and the protocols in the cupboard:—

"The Congress of 1862 began at twelve o'clock, and finished at half-past!"

Sound Feet for Soldiers.

Major Winthrop's advice to volunteers, on the subject of proper care of the feet, ought to be pondered and remembered by new recruits. It will be found in his article on the New York Seven's Regiment, published in the Atlantic Monthly for June, 1861. It is as follows:

"And let me say a word to my fellow volunteers, actual and prospective, in all the armies of all the States.

A soldier needs, besides his soldierly debt,

1. Good feet.
2. A good stomach.
3. And after these, comes the good head and the good heart.

But good feet are distinctly the first thing; without them you cannot get to your duty. If a comrade, or a horse, or a locomotive, takes you on its back to the field, you are useless there. And when the field is lost you cannot retire, run away and save your bacon.

Good shoes and plenty of walking make good feet. A man who pretends to belong to an infantry company ought always keep himself in training, so that any moment he can march twenty or thirty miles without feeling a pang or a blister. Was this the case with even a decimation of the army who rushed to defend Washington? Were you so trained, my comrades of the Seventh?

A captain of a company who will let his men march with such shoes as I have seen on the feet of some poor fellows in this war, ought to be garoted with shoe-strings, or at least compelled to play Pope, and wash the feet of the whole army of the Apostles of Liberty.

If you find a foot soldier lying beat out by the roadside, desperate as a sea-sick man, five to one his heels are too high, or his soles too narrow or too thin, or his shoe is not made straight on the inside, so that the great toe can spread into its place as he treads.

I am an old walker over Alps across the water, and over Cordilleras, Sierras, Deserts, and Prairies at home. I have done my nearly sixty miles a day without discomfort, and speaking from large experience, and with painful recollections of the suffering and death I have known for want of good feet on the march, I say to every volunteer—Trust in God: but keep your shoes easy!"

THE REAL SOURCE OF BRITISH POWER.—Napoleon at St. Helena sadly said, "Great Britain conquered me not with her swords, but with her spindles; with her spindles she subsidized all Europe, and here I am." The power of steam employed in Great Britain is estimated as equal to the united forces of 600,000,000 of men, and yet the total number of persons employed in the coal mines is but 120,000, two-thirds of whom raise coal for other purposes than for steam-engines, so that 40,000 men mine coal enough to do the work of 600,000,000 men. The entire population of the island at the time of the foregoing estimate (1851) was 21,000,000, each one of whom, man, woman and child, were the power thus equally divided, would have thirty willing slaves to do his work. Slaves that never tire, never fall sick, need no clothes, and eat only fire and water, costing only 40,000 men to raise food for 600,000,000. To enable this fuel to do the work it is, however, required that man should play the part of engineer. The engineer must have his engine. But all the engines in Britain are made by 35,000 men. Adding now together the miners, 40,000, the engine builders, 35,000, we have less than 100,000 men as the total human force given to the development of a natural one equal to 600,000,000, the physical force of each being then multiplied six thousand times. It is by means of this mighty power, aided by her carrying trade, and her absorption of all the earnings of all the agricultural nations who submit to her system of trade, that Great Britain has heaped up her vast wealth, now estimated at £6,000,000,000 sterling, or $30,000,000,000. It is by these means that she collects a revenue of $355,000,000. It is thus that she supports her monarchy, her aristocracy, her hierarchy, her army, her navy, her civil list and pays the interest on her national debt of £800,000,000, or $4000,000,000.

A second semi-official announcement was made in all the London papers of the 16th, to the effect that the marriage of the Prince of Wales to the Princess Alexandria had been privately settled at Brussels, that the union is one entirely of affection, and that in the knowledge that the alliance was considered most desirable by the late Prince Consort, the Queen finds the deepest satisfaction at its approaching consummation. The affair, then, must have been on the carpet for some time, if the Prince's father knew of it, and this proof that the attachment has already undergone the trial of time will be accepted by the people of England as a gratifying assurance that the union is likely to be a lastingly happy one. Happy in the present joy of their betrothal, the Prince and Princess, with the Prince of Denmark, left Brussels on the 16th to join the Queen at Reinhardsbrunn, their departure for the Belgian capital being marked by the highest honours.

—The discoveries made by means of the spectrum analysis seem to be only in their infancy. It is now ascertained that rubidium, an alkaline metal, supposed to have been extremely rare, exists in the ashes of beet-root, tobacco, coffee, tea, and grapes. In fact, this metal is one of the most widely diffused bodies in nature.

—The complicated system of sewers through which the tunnel of the new subterranean railway in London passes has caused great trouble, the wet still streams down the sides, broken drains yawn on either side, and the odor is anything but agreeable. Nevertheless, by dint of severe application and a great deal of ingenuity, the tunnelers gradually becoming water-tight and sweet-smelling, and on the experimental trip, some weeks since, 600 passengers passed through without suffering material inconvenience.

Epitome of News.

—The village of Oshawa has raised $400 for the distressed Lancashire operatives.

—The Quebec Mercury says that a Reciprocity bill will form part of the Ministerial programme next session.

—The Liverpool papers announce a successful balloon ascent from that city by Professor Simmons, "the Canadian aeronaut."

Mr. W. H. Anderson, of Quebec, late President of the Quebec Bible, has determined to leave Canada and fix his home in England.

—The ships coming into Halifax from the West Indies stations have many cases of yellow fever on board.

—The Halifax Chronicle says the blight has appeared to a very great extent among the potatoes of Nova Scotia.

—Mr. Hiram Wilson, farmer, of North Gwillimbury, was killed by falling into the cylinders of a thrashing machine on the 24th ultimo.

—It is denied by the Ministerial organs in Lower Canada that the Courier de St. Hyacinthe in any degree spoke the views of Mr. Sicotte in its recent attack on Mr. Dorion.

—It is said that Mr. Foley, at his recent interview with the Press delegates, did not commit the Ministry to the abolition of newspaper postage; he spoke only for himself.

FIRE IN OSHAWA.—The woollen factory owned by Mr. Samuel Hall, located just North of Oshawa, and occupied by Mr. George Brock, was destroyed by fire on Monday. Mr. Hall had an insurance for $7,000 on the building, and the stock and machinery was insured in about $4,000.

—Messrs. W. H. Russell & Son, the proprietors of Russell's Hotel, Quebec, proprietors also of the St. Lewis Hotel, in the same city, have determined upon closing the latter establishment for a short period. For the present, their old established hotel, in Palace street, is capable of providing sufficient accomodation for the greater portion of the travelling public.

—A man named Crosby, who belonged in St. Catherines, C. W., enlisted in the Irish Regiment, at Buffalo, some time since, and received his bounty money. A few days ago he attempted to desert by swimming across the Niagara, but was drowned in the effort. His body floated ashore near Tonawanda.—Rochester Democrat.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

New York, Oct. 4.—R. A. Witthaus, of this city, received a letter from an officer of Garibaldi's army, tendering the services of 4,000 or 5,000 soldiers and 200 officers, to the fight for the Union, and asking if the State of New York would engage them. They can arrive in New York ready equipped. They will have no difficulty in leaving Italy, as they have taken no part in the late demonstrations.

Louisville, Ky., 3.—The Confederates began to fortify Frankfort, but they are now represented as evacuating it. Few of the enemy are found in that direction.

To-day there has been constant thrashing on the Bardstown turnpike, near Mount Washington.

The Confederates are reported as being 10,000 strong in the Southern fork of Salt river. They are fortifying their positions among the hills and have received heavy reinforcements, some say as high as 40,000 men.

Our advance occupies the northern bank of the river, and is waiting to-day for the main body of the army to come up.

A fight is anticipated to-morrow as the Confederates swear that they will not run any further away, and our army intends to advance and give them battle.

Gen. Dumont, of Indiana, left for the field to-day.

Later.—Capt. Hartley, of the 4th Indiana cavalry, says that the enemy claim 30,000 troops on the east fork of the Salt river. A battle is certain to-morrow.

In the skirmishes to-day we had two men killed and ten wounded. The enemy's loss is unknown.

A great many deserters are coming in from the Confederate lines.

Cincinnati, Oct. 4.—A despatch from Capt. Houser, of the 23rd Indiana regiment, dated Greensburg, Ky., says that General G. W. Morgan arrived with his whole command at Greensburg this evening. He brought all his trains and artillery with him. His men are in fine health, notwithstanding the many hardships they have undergone in their march from Cumberland Gap.

The Commercial says that General Morgan's rot out was the most arduous and hazardous of the war. During its march northward our army was constantly environed by the enemy's cavalry. Gen. Morgan maintained the offensive throughout.

One division marched twenty-four consecutive hours. For three days our troops had no water but that found in stagnant pools. All the guns in the Gap were brought away excepting four 24-pounders, which were too heavy for transportation, and the trunions were knocked off before they were abandoned. Greensburg, Ky., is 15 miles above Portsmouth.

Washington, Oct. 4.—It is believed that the nearest point to Washington on the Southern side of the Potomac at which there are any Confederate in arms is the Rappahannock station, on the Orange and Alexandria railroad, 54 miles from Alexandria.

Springfield, Mo., Oct. 1.—The correspondence of the Missouri Democrat says, —Last evening rumors were afloat of sounds of artillery firing in the direction of Sarcoxie, but they were deemed unreliable. To-day these rumors were increased, and by noon word was received that a fight had taken place. The enemy's forces are unknown, and we have not yet learned the result.

Advices from Sarcoxie of September 25th state, that two brigades of Kansas troops had arrived there. The Confederate Gen. Coffee, with 3,000 men was at Newtonia, 15 miles south of that place. When Solomon's advance guard arrived, a Confederate Major who was there on a visit made his escape and got Gen. Coffee notice of our approach, when it is said he immediately retreated South. The Confederates at Sarcoxie say, they have 10,000 men at Cowskin Prairie, and that Hindman, with 30,000 men is in Arkansas near the line, and as soon as they join forces they will march direct on St. Louis. All the prisoners taken tell of rich booty promised them when they take St. Louis. It appears that such promises are the great incentives used by the Confederate Generals to keep their men together.

Washington Oct. 5.—Official information has been received here that the Confederates, under Vandorn, Price and Lovell, yesterday attacked our forces at Corinth, but were repulsed with great slaughter, and retreated, leaving their dead and wounded on the field. Our forces are in full pursuit.

New York, October 6.—A Key West letter, dated September 29, says Col. Morgan had issued an order freeing all the slaves within his department.

The Herald's despatch from Washington says Gen. Lockwood is liberating the slaves of the disloyalists on the eastern shore of Virginia.

President Lincoln, Gen. McClellan and others, left Gen. McClellan's headquarters at 10 o'clock to-day, and visited the Battlefield of South Mountain. Gen McClellan and staff then took leave of the President, who arrived at Frederick at 5 o'clock p. m. He was then enthusiastically received, and spoke a few words to the assembled multitude. He merely made a call upon the wounded Gen. Hartauff, and soldiers, to whom he returned thanks.

Cincinnati, Oct. 6.—M. C. Garber, Quarter-master of Gen. Morgan's division, telegraphs the following to the Madison (Ind.) Courier. The advance brigade of Gen. G. W. Morgan's command, from Cumberland Gap, arrived at Greensburg, Ky., on the 3rd inst., after an exhausting march of sixteen days, having roads to make in many places. The men are shoeless and were for days without rations. They had to gather subsistence from the corn standing in the fields, which they grated to make bread of after the fatigues of the day. The men bore their hardships, privations and the fatigues of the march with the greatest fortitude. They marched 10 hours a day, skirmishing in the woods on each side of the road and repelling the attempt of the Confederate cavalry and their front and rear to capture them.

The enemy blockaded the way all along the march and at every suitable place harrassed our columns as much as possible.

Our force is 10,000 strong, with a magnificent park of artillery, consisting of 28 pieces, six of them being 23 pounders. We had 400 waggons, all of which we brought off with safety.

The works at Cumberland Gap were left in ruins.

Cairo, Oct. 5.—Glorious news from Corinth today. The Confederates are routed and retreating. Their loss is very heavy. Ours also is large. Gen. Dodge, sent a message from Columbus to prepare for a large number of wounded.

Generals Price, Vandorn and Lovell were in command of the Confederates, who numbered 40 000. Our troops are said to have acted nobly.

Louisville, Oct. 6.—A portsmouth (Ohio) despatch to Gov. Robinson says John Morgan, with 1,000 Confederates, yesterday attacked the Carter County Home Guards, near Olive Hill. After several hours severe skirmishing, Morgan was repulsed, and several of his men killed. Morgan then retreated toward the Licking River, burning 35 houses on his way. Last night Morgan returned to Olive Hill. Meanwhile Gen. Seifert went to Portsmouth and brought up 500 of the 17th Ohio.

Bardstown advices say, the Confederates have 30,000 to 40,000 men within a circle of eight miles in diameter around Bardstown. Our central advance this afternoon was four miles this side of Bardstown. They have been skirmishing and driven the Confederates before them for the past three days. We have captured 600 prisoners.

It is said that Kirby Smith has arrived at Frankfort with 10,000 men, and Humphrey Marshall on his way with 5,000.

The Confederates evidently mean to make a stand at Frankfort and a battle at Bardstown seems eminent.

McClellan's Headquarters, Oct. 5.—A company of the 54th, which was guarding the Baltimore and Ohio railroad bridge at Paw Paw, about half-way between Hancock and Cumberland, was yesterday attacked by a Confederate force and all taken prisoners. At the same time a cavalry force, under Col. McReynolds, captured the encampment of the Confederates, bringing away two pieces of artillery, ten wagons and sixty horses and mules. A strong cavalry force has been sent after the retreating Confederates.

The Late Elections.

To-morrow the contest commences in the Thames division, the last of the elections for the Legislative Council, and we hope and believe that Mr. Blake will be returned by a handsome majority over his Yankee Tory opponent, Mr. Ford. Seven members of the Legislative Council have been elected in Upper Canada during the last thirty days, and nine of these are supporters of the policy of the late Opposition. We speak of an organization which is none distinct, because parties have not, since the recent changes formed themselves so definitely as to admit of a distinct classification. Very certain it is that these nine elections have not been carried upon the Double Majority and abandonment of the Representation policy of the present Government. Not one member elect could have been returned on that platform. The Reform candidates have gone to the country strictly as supporters of the policy of the late Opposition, condemning the corruption and subserviency to Lower Canada of the late Government, and insisting upon the duty of providing for the redress of the grievances of Upper Canada, and of introducing economy into the administration of the Provincial finances. The election of but one of seven candidates, the exception being Mr. Reid, as a supporter of the late Government, shows that the people of Upper Canada truly want a Reform party to secure for them the blessings of just and economical government. Their reliance is safely placed, we verily believe, but it behoves Reformers to keep their armour bright, and not permit themselves to be betrayed by the manifold temptations of office into circumstances will weaken public confidence in the honesty of the party.—Globe.

The War News.

Prominent among all news is that relating to the strife between our American neighbors, and the eagerness with which the interrogatory is put by those in both town and country, proves the truth of this remark.

Connected as we are, by blood and commercial ties, apart from other considerations it is therefore to be looked for that we take a deep interest in this fratricidal war, and earnestly desire that it may soon close. We should be delighted could we chronicle anything tending to indulge a reasonable hope of the termination of hostilities. This we cannot do so far from thinking that the end is near, we think every battle increases the distance between the two parts of the nation, and makes the prospects of peace farther off than ever. Since the week of battles fought in Maryland in the middle of September, there has been a "masterly inactivity" pervading the "grand army of the Potomac." A year ago it was looking as it is now at the rebel army across the River, apparently fearing to attack it. The grand opportunity afforded by the invasion of Maryland of striking a decisive blow at the rebellion, has been lost, and the Northern Generals by mismanagement have incurred the severe recriminations of the press, which brands their conduct as infamous, the result of either incompetency or cowardice. The army of Gen. Lee had been watched by the Federals, and attempts were made to entrap it, but they allowed the door, it is said, to be open, and it marched away. Harper's Ferry was not reinforced and it fell into the hands of the enemy, giving them an easy and safe exit from Maryland into Virginia, bringing with them stores that were much needed. The raid into Maryland has been a success for the rebels rather than a defeat, and it remains to be seen what will be the next "strategetic movement" of the "grand army of the Potomac." Some three weeks have passed and no movement of any importance has been made in the field—at a time of the year too suitable for field operations. Important events have, however, transpired elsewhere, which should be noted. A call was made some time ago for the Governors of the loyal States to assemble in Pennsylvania, to hold conference on the great question of the day. The most of them responded and attended the Conference. An Address to the President was drawn up and 13 of the Governors went to the White House to present it. They were kindly received by the President who seemed thankful for the opportunity to converse with them, and received very courteously the suggestions made of the proper equipping and managing the new levies being sent forward. The Address, it is said, conveyed the unbounded confidence of the Governors in the President, and pledged their individual and united support in the great work of prosecuting the war till the rebellion was crushed out.

The President has issued a Proclamation subject to the approval of Congress, declaring that every slave of a master found in arms against the Federal Government on and after the 1st of January next shall be absolutely free—a measure clamoured for long ago by many Northerners, and which it is said, is well received by the generality of the Northern press and army. It is viewed with alarm in the South, and in debate in the Southern Congress several resolutions were introduced declaring their intentions to kill every Northern invading Southern territory. It was said that a pirate the black flag was raised as indictive of their determination to inaugurate retaliatory measures.

The subject of the Proclamation will, then only, find its way into the heart of the Southern country, and a great stampede of slaves North will be the consequence, and probably no measure yet passed will have so important a bearing on the war as this. The slaves heretofore have been a source of great benefit to the rebels—tilling the soil, and doing much to facilitate them in their field operations—and their loss will be severely felt. A terrible insurrection is predicted by many as the result. Time alone will show the consequence of these measures, and we await their development.

A short time ago at Louisville, one of the Northern Generals was shot by his fellow officer for an aggravated assault. Major General Nelson had occasion to find fault with Brigadier General Davis for neglectful want of attention in an order for [illegible] to show this disposition. He suspended his command and ordered him to go to Cincinnati and report himself to General Wright. He did so, and was ordered back to Louisville. Meeting General Nelson in the Galt House he asked for an explanation from Nelson, but in place of receiving it was additionally insulted, being struck in the face several times, and cursed in an infamous manner. General Davis exasperated by such treatment from a fellow soldier borrowed a pistol from a friend and shot Nelson. He died in about an hour after. It is said that Nelson was a man of violent temper and intemperate habits. He has brought upon himself his premature death. The bystanders justify Davis in the act, but of course he will have to answer the crime by his life, unless the executive will interfere.

We refer our readers to the copious extracts of War news elsewhere.

The Governor General at Port Hope

A deputation from Port Hope came up on Sunday night to inform our Town authorities that the Governor General was to pass through Port Hope on Monday at 2 o'clock, p. m., and inviting the Council, the Rifle Company, and such of the inhabitants as choose to go, to join in receiving His Excellency. Next morning His Worship the Mayor called the Council together and it was agreed to go and present an Address to the Governor. Accordingly, the whole members of the Council, with the exceptions of one who missed his passage, the Rifle Company, and a few citizens left at 10 o'clock, a. m., on Monday. The Governor reached Port Hope shortly after 2 o'clock, when Addresses were read from Peterborough and Port Hope.

There was a vast number of people assembled, and also, excellent accomodations, especially for the ladies, and the townspeople deserve credit for the handsome manner in which they carried out their arrangements, and the hospitible and kind manner they entertained the people from Peterborough.

Our folks returned safe and sound about 7 p. m., well pleased with their trip.

The following is the Address read by His Worship the Mayor to His Excellency:

To His Excellency the Right Honorable Charles Stanley Viscount Monck, Baron Monck of Ballytramin in the County of Wexford, Governor General of British North America, &c.

May it please Your Excellency:

We the inhabitants of the Town of Peterborough by our Municipal Council approach Your Excellency in the feelings of devotion and attachment to the House, and of the highest respect for Your Excellency as the representative in this Country of our beloved Sovereign.

We desire to express the regret we feel that Your Excellency has not been able, owing to the exigences of the Public service to visit at this time the Town of Peterborough, where your Excellency would have seen evidences of a steady and marked progress, not inferior to that exhibited by any other part of Canada situated on the main lines of travel, on which your Excellency has had the opportunity of viewing.

We assure Your Excellency that should you at any future time be able to visit us, the people of Peterborough will rejoice in the opportunity to give you a right loyal and hearty welcome.

We pray the Great Dispenser of events may so order His providence that Your Excellency's administration of the affairs of this country may conduce alike to Your Excellency's own happiness and the prosperity and and advancement of the Province.

CHARLES PERRY,
Mayor.

Peterborough, 6th October, 1862.

We are not in possession of the Reply as it was verbal.

We understand the Governor General expressed his regret to our Mayor at his not being able to visit Peterborough, but promised to do so at some future time.

The Lancashire Distress.

Scarcely a Town of any importance in Canada, save Peterborough, and there may be a few others, but has done something to relieve the sufferings of our fellow countrymen in the father land. The small Town of Cornwall has raised $583, and other places are taking hold of the affair with life and spirit, but we in Peterborough seem to think it is not an affair that concerns us. What! our flesh and blood perishing for food and we having enough and to spare will not share with them! It is too bad that no effort is made to collect something for our starving countrymen. In order to inaugurate a beginning, we will gladly receive and acknowledge any sum given for this purpose in the Examiner.

We give the returns of the several elections for the Legislative Council held recently, and we copy an article from our cotemporary of the Globe, on the status of the Candidates already returned, from which it appears that six out of seven members elected, were therefore opponents to the late McDonald-Cartier administration. The exception being Mr. Reid of the Qui te Division, who was elected by the narrow majority of 71 over Dr. Hope, the others had respectable majorities, whilst the last the Midland gave Mr. McMaster the large majority of 1439. He may rarely be proud of such an expression of public confidence, and we will answer that his supporters will not find that confidence misplaced. He is a sterling upright man, and the glorious old constituency of Rober Baldwin has won the approbation of the followers of that good man, in returning William McMaster so triumphantly.

In the Thames Division which elects its candidate to-day, we observe in the Woodstock Sentinel, a number a certificates going to show that Mr. Blake who it appears hails for a Temperance man—has within five years or less drunk spirituous liquors and beer in sundry places. The other candidate Mr. Ford is an American by birth, but goes for British connection and Conservative Government. The chances seem to be in favour of Mr. Blake. Altogether we shall have a large addition of liberal, intelligent members in the upper branch of the Legislature, tending to the [illegible] of the people, by whom and just legislation.

THE COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SHOW.

As we stated last week the Agricultural Show of this County was by far the best ever held in this Town. Nearly, if not quite, 100 entries were made, and the articles had animals as a whole were superior to any shown before. The farm produce was excellent, and the fruit splendid. Apples and Pears were in great variety. We were shown some very fine Apples and Pears exhibited by Mr. F. Stoddart which brought the first prize at the Provincial Exhibition; they were the best we have seen for a long time. They were raised in a Nursery at St. Catherines, of which Mr. Stoddart is Agent. Professor Anderson in Peterborough.

Who has not heard of Professor Anderson, the far-famed "Great Wizard of the North," and where is the man who has not become familiar with his name? Long ago that name was a "household word" in Scotland. Years after it acquired a celebrity in England which no other Professor of the Magic art has been able to accomplish.—Full five and twenty years since Professor Anderson made a furore in the City of Edinburgh. Fifteen years ago he was the "bright particular star" of old London. Ten years back he drew all New York to see him at the Astor Place Opera House. Within the last few days he has been the eyesore of thronging multitudes in the City of Toronto, and now comes to Peterboro'. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings next he will display his Magic in our Town Hall—a building which we are afraid will sadly contrast, in his imagination, with the Opera-houses and Theatres he has performed in elsewhere. That he will attract a dense crowd every night can hardly be doubted; the pity is that the walls of the Hall are not formed of some elastic material capable of being expanded to accommodate the audience. We hope it will be well lighted, that those who are astute enough may learn some of the great Magician's tricks. He is accompanied by his daughter, Miss Louise Sybil Anderson, who is reported to perform her part as a Clairvoyante to the creation of the utmost amusement among the beholders. Get ready every one, to see Professor Anderson.

Too Bad.—We understand that the Legislative Grant for the Union School has not yet been received. The Secretary of the Board applied a few days ago to the Town Treasurer, requesting him to write to the Educational Department to forward it at once as it was needed. He wrote accordingly and put it in the Post Office, but did not pay the postage, the Postmaster marking it free. In due course an open envelope, containing the envelope sent by the Treasurer with "unpaid postage 1½ cents" marked upon it, and a printed synopsis of the new postage law. No word about the money,—the rage about the unpaid postage seems to have precluded all else.

Now we submit that as it is culpable neglect on the part of the Department in not sending the money in July, it should have paid the postage without a cavil. Dr. Ryerson has the money lying in the Bank at interest, and if he is making "casual advantages" at the expense of the Teachers in the Union School he could charge the Department with 14 cents and make something to boot.

The Merchants of Port Hope have adopted the early closing system from the 1st of October; all places of business are closed at 7 o'clock, Saturday evenings excepted. Could Peterboro' not follow the example?

The rate in the Town of Port Hope has been struck for the present year at 2s. 6d. in the £.

Several communications and other important matter has been crowded out.

New York State Fair.

This Fair opened in Rochester on Monday last. The weather was unfavourable, and the number of visitors not very large. On Wednesday the number of entries were only 3,000. The Rochester Express of Wednesday thus says of the second day's proceedings:—

The weather yesterday continued chilly and sour, and this morning was not at all improved. About the middle of the forenoon a cold drizzling rain began to fall, continuing up to the time of this writing, nearly 1 o'clock, with no signs of abatement.

There is to-day a slight falling off in the number of visitors, as compared with yesterday. Of course, the number of admissions is large, but not nearly so numerous as if the weather had been favourable. All the trains came into town this morning full.

But notwithstanding the foul weather, every body seemed cheerful and disposed to make the best of it.

Domestic Hall forms a great centre of attraction. In it is to be found every variety of domestic manufacture and of art and taste. Every department of household industry is here represented and almost all branches of the fine arts. Every article is the best of its kind and many are expressions of indomitable industry and perseverance. Our time and space would utterly fail us were we to name what may be seen under the roof of Domestic Hall.

The show of stock is very fine, and attracts great attention.

The entries of horses are not as numerous as at some previous Fairs, but there are many horses present of excellent blood, including a good variety of work horses, which, after all, are of the most practical benefit for every day use.

The great stock raisers of the State are fully represented, and there is a full show of the finest cattle to be found in the country.

Of sheep and swine the number is very large, and an admirable collection is exhibited. It is found to-day that the quarters provided are too limited, and 20 additional stalls are being erected, besides the 250 ordered by the Society. The collection of poultry is very fine, and attracts much attention.

The number of agricultural machines, plows and implements is large, but the rain to-day interfered very much in their exhibition.

There is not a very full show of grain and products of the dairy, but a great variety of fine vegetables are exhibited.

Floral Hall presents large attractions, and is constantly filled with visitors.

The number of entries up to 12 o'clock, were:—

Class 1,—Cattle.....	201
Class 2,—Horses.....	234
Class 3,—Sheep, Swine and Poultry..	482
Class 4,—Farm Implements, &c.....	250
Class 5,—Grain, Vegetables & Dairy	325
Class 5,—Domestic Manufactures...	300
Class 7,—Miscellaneous.....	358
Class 8,—Fruits, Flowers & Designs	303
Total entries at noon.....	2,348

A very few more entries were doubtless made after the above were copied from the books, and as no more were made after dinner, the total number of entries during this Fair will not vary much from 2,500.

On the whole, and notwithstanding the unfavorable weather, the Fair is very successful, though the number of transient visitors will be lessened by the storm.

The Fair closed on Friday last "in a blaze of glorious and glory," as one of the Rochester papers says. It does not appear to have approached comparison with our Provincial Exhibition, although it was considered as really successful. A number of visitors who went over from Toronto returned on Saturday evening and say that in no respect was it equal to the Exhibition lately held here. The total receipts from all sources amounted to $11,000, being $3,000 less than those of the Provincial Fair.—Leader.

Death of Mrs. Dr. Livingstone.—The mournful intelligence of the death of the beloved wife of Dr. David Livingstone, the distinguished African traveller, has just reached this country. Mrs. Livingstone died at Shupana, in Africa, of fever, extending over seven days, on the evening of Sunday, the 28th of April, 1862, and on the following day her sorrowing husband, his brother Charles, and other friends committed her precious remains to the grave, in the faith and hope of a blessed immortality. Mrs. Livingstone left this country for Africa in July, 1861, and had only joined her husband about three months before her death. She leaves her husband, three sons and two daughters, and other dear relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. Dr. Livingstone's children are at present in Scotland, the eldest being about sixteen, and the youngest from three to four years of age. It is well known that Dr Livingstone's wife is the eldest daughter of the Rev. Robert Moffatt, the enterprising and eminently successful African missionary.—Glasgow Mail.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

Arrival of the Jura.

Cape Race, Oct. 4.

The steamship Jura from Liverpool on the 25th ult, via Londonderry on the 27th ult, was boarded by the news yacht of the Associated Press, at 9 o'clock, A. M., today. Her advices are one day later than those by the City of Washington.

The North American, from Quebec, arrived at Londonderry on the 25th ult.

The political news by the Jura is unimportant.

The news of Gen. McClellan's victory over Gen. Lee was received with much satisfaction by the Federal party in Liverpool, and gave an impetus to the cotton market, which was checked by large arrivals of surats.

The Times of the 25th, in an editorial, says, after recent events it is not impossible that we may yet see Garibaldi crossing the Atlantic in the assumed character of an American, and fighting for the subjugation

INFORMATION WANTED.

Belleville, Sept. 3rd, 1862.

P. S.—Our Exchanges will perform an act of charity by copying the above.

FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

538 Broadway, New York.

TO parties little acquainted with the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machines the careful perusal of the Company's Circular is especially commended. This circular can be had on application It is very specific, and will be found highly instructive, having been prepared with much care and we will abide by all statements therein made.

The following brief quotation is characteristic of the entire Circular:

"This Machine is better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in market to the frequent changes and almost endless variety of sewing required in a family: for it will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect. Will sew from the finest gauze to the heaviest cloth, and even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed needle or tension, or making any adjustment of machine whatever."

Thus have we successfully overcome the most difficult point in the Sewing Machine art. It was no ordinary triumph. Distantly can we now say, "No other Machine compares with it in this respect." Hence, have we uniformly—almost without exception—taken the highest premium, wherever the Machine has been properly exhibited in competition with other first class Sewing Machines. Hence it is that we are able to offer the following guarantee, viz.; "We warrant every Machine we sell to give BETTER satisfaction than any other Sewing Machine in the market, or money refunded." We never sell a Machine on any other terms. The guarantee is as reliable as the note of any business man in the land. For more than five years have we relied upon such facts for the reputation of our Machine; and without a single travelling agent in the field, there is scarcely a neighborhood on the continent where the Machine is not favourably known. We prefer such a reputation to one based on mere "talking points," as they are technically called in the trade. Hence we make but one kind of stitch, viz., the lock-stitch, alike on both sides, requiring only one-third the thread of other kinds of stitches.

N. B.—Local Agents wanted in every county throughout the West. ☞ Special inducements offered.

ANNUAL MEETING

INVESTIGATION REPORT - - - DECLARATION OF BONUS.

THE thirty-sixth annual Meeting of this Company was held within the Royal Hotel, Aberdeen on Friday, the 10th April

Alexander Stronach, Esq., of Drumallan, Chairman of the Ordinary Directors, in the Chair.

There were submitted to the meeting—

1.—Report by the Directors, which, on the motion of the Chairman, was cordially and unanimously approved of and adopted.

2.—The Balance Sheet for the past year, with detailed states relative thereto, duly certified as correct, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, by the Chairman and Manager, and also by the Auditor.

There was also laid on the Table the various Valuation States in connection with the Quinquennial Investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January, 1862.

The following particulars derived from the Balance Sheet and States before-mentioned, show the result of the operations of the Company for the past year:—

Amount proposed for Life Assurance during the year, contained in 1139 Proposal	£454,835 0 0
Amount of Proposals accepted, and for which 951 Policies were issued	359,680 0 0
ANNUAL PREMIUMS or said Policies	11,170 1 0
CLAIMS BY DEATH including BONUSES on PARTICIPAT ON POLICIES, and after deducting Sums recovered from other Offices under guarantees	22,999 1 0
TOTAL SUM Assured under 1,759 current LIFE POLICIES	1,355,25 0 0
TOTAL ACCUMULATED FUNDS	373,563 3 3
TOTAL ANNUAL REVENUE	96,756 4 4

With reference to the recent investigation into the state of the Company's affairs, as at 31st January last, the Report Stated that both the principles of valuation and the details thereof, had been submitted to James John Downes, Esq., Actuary to the Economic Life Office in London, a gentleman well known as one of the highest authorities on such subjects in the kingdom, and had received his entire approval, as having been made on just and sound principles, and accurately carried out as certified in his report to the Directors, which formed part of the Appendix to their Report. This stap the Directors considered could not fail to give the utmost confidence—both to the shareholders and the Policyholders—in the soundness and correctness of the valuation.

During the Quinquennial period, the claims by death, including the bonus additions which had been paid, and which had been considerably under the number that might have been expected from the Mortality Tables on which the Office rates are based, amounting to £30,975 6s 6d.

In valuing the Policies, each had been separately calculated, and nett premiums had only been used, there leaving a surplus of annual revenue of £11,437 16s 7d., to meet future expenses and to form a source of profit for next investigation. The total amount of claims by death paid since the commencement of the Company, was £317,781 4s.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinized in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

DECLARATION OF BONUS.

From the profits realized on the Life business, a retrospective Bonus of £1 7s 6d per cent per annum for the quinquennial period was declared; on the sums originally assured under all Participating Policies, increased by the previous additions thereto: also a further prospective Bonus of £1 per cent per annum, on the amount of the Policies with said Bonuses, on all such of said Policies as may become claims by Death previously to the 31st January, 1867.

It will be observed, that this rate of Bonus is equivalent in the case of our older Policies to £1 14s per cent per annum on the original sum assured; that the total additions to the sum assured, now vested, are equal to 32 per cent on the sum assured: and that as the younger ages the additions amount to upwards of 78 per cent of the premiums paid.

Statement showing the Progress of the Company's Business during the Quinquennial Period, ending 31st January, 1862:

Year ending 31st January.	Amounts proposed for Assurance.	Amount of New Policies Issued.	No. of Policies issued.	New Annual Premiums.	Total Revenue in each year.	Accumulated Funds.

FIRE INSURANCE.

THE following table, compiled from the official returns, exhibits, at a glance, the increase of duty paid to the Government by the different Insurance Offices, metropolitan and provincial, during the year 1861.

THE "ROYAL."

It will be seen, stands as before, at the very head of the list, and maintains a rate of progress very far in advance of all its rivals and competitors. Twelve months ago, we had the gratification of recording the fact that its increase, in the year 1860, had been more than double that of any other company—had exceeded 50 per cent., of the entire increase of all the London offices combined—and had, also exceeded 35 per cent, of the aggregate increase of the remaining twenty eight provincial offices. We have now the pleasure of inviting the attention of our readers to the testimony of these later returns, which show that in the year 1861, the increase of the "Royal" was very nearly sixty per cent, in excess of the increase of any other company—that there were but three offices which came even within fifty per cent. of it, and that it was actually more than one-sixth of the entire increase of the remaining forty-four offices, London and Provincial, put together. Comment upon such facts as these would be superfluous. They prove, unmistakeably, the continued advance of the "Royal" in the confidence and good opinion of the public. That advance has been, from the beginning, so remarkable as it has been rapid; and we cordially congratulate the directors and shareholders upon it, because we regard it as the just reward of prudent management, of liberal and honorable dealing, and of undoubted stability.

The Securities held by the Company were in a satisfactory position, and had been recently carefully scrutinized in detail by the Directors.

In conclusion, the Directors congratulated both the Proprietors and the Assured on the high position which the Company now occupied in the estimation of the public, and on the encouraging prospect of its business operations for the future.

THIS is probably the best, as well as the most thorough and extensive book ever published, as a Domestic or Family Medical Work. Its author is now an old man, and is probably more generally known as a popular medical author than any man living, owing to the great popularity and extensive sale of his old work, which was one of great value, but in the present advanced state of medical science is altogether behind the times. Dr. G. is a graduate of several of the best Medical Colleges in the world, viz.: of Philadelphia, and of London and Paris. He has been a successful practicing physician for nearly forty years; and it can be hardly supposed that any man can be better qualified to write such a work than he is. He has spent most of the time for several years in preparing this work—intending it, as he often remarked, as his last and greatest Legacy to Posterity.

THE SNAKE IN THE GLASS.

A BOMBAY.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Come listen awhile to me, my lad,
Come listen to me for a spell!
Let that terrible drum
For a moment be dumb,
For your uncle is going to tell
What befell
A youth who loved liquor too well.

A clever young man was he, my lad,
And with beauty uncommonly blest,
Ere, with brandy and wine,
He began to decline,
And behaved like a person possessed;
I protest
The temperance plan is the best!

One evening he went to a tavern, my lad,
He went to a tavern one night,
And drinking too much
Rum, brandy, and such,
The chap got exceedingly "tight,"
And was quite
What your aunt would entitle a "fright."

The fellow fell into a snooze, my laid;
'Tis a horrible slumber he takes—
He trembles with fear,
And acts very queer;
My eyes! how he shivers and shakes
When he wakes,
And raves about horrid great snakes!

'Tis a warning to you and me, my lad;
A particular caution to all—
Though no one can see
The vipers but he—
To hear the poor lunatic bawl:
"How they crawl!—
All over the floor and wall!"

Next morning he took to his bed, my lad;
Next morning he took to his bed;
And he never got up
To dine or to sup,
Though properly physicked and bled;
And I read
Next day, the poor fellow was dead!

You've heard of the snake in the grass, my lad
Of the viper concealed in the grass;
But now, you must know,
Man's deadliest foe
Is a snake of a different class;
Alas!—
'Tis the viper that lurks in the glass!

A warning to you and me, my lad;
A very imperative call:—
Of liquor keep clear:
Don't drink even beer,
If you'd shun all occasions to fall;
If at all,
I say take it uncommonly small.

And if you are partial to snakes, my lad,
(A passion I think rather low)
Don't enter, to see them,
The Devil's Museum!—
'Tis very much better to go
(That's so!)
And visit a regular show!

Miscellaneous.

Important Inquest.

(From the Port Hope Messenger.)

An inquest was held by Coroner Maxwell, of Port Hope, on view of the body of Sarah Henderson, late wife of Wm. Henderson, of the Township of Clarke, on the 27th day of August, then by adjournment to the 29th and 30th days of September.

From the strong suspicion formed in the public mind, and at the instigation of Henderson's own friends it became necessary to have the body examined, after it had been interred nearly thirteen months. The investigation has resulted in finding Henderson guilty of "Murder," and he is now in jail awaiting his trial at the approaching Assizes, to commence on the 28th inst.

Henderson is 57 years of age, and has a fine family; four of his sons are teaching school, and the two younger ones are now at College studying for the ministry. This sad affair has plunged a large and respectable family in despair. The following is the Coroner's Charge to the Jury:

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY,—With regard to a charge from the Coroner, although this allegation is usual, but is not in strictness necessary; for the finding upon oath will supply the omission of the Charge. Yet, nevertheless, the immense excitement created in the public mind, and particularly in this neighborhood, by this painful occurrence, a few remarks from me may not be considered out of place, and perhaps is expected. I have the fullest confidence in your integrity as a Jury, and that in rendering your verdict wisdom and justice will be combined, and the interests of the Crown as well as those of the subject respected and maintained. The Coroner's Inquest is to ascertain truly the cause of the party's death, and is rather for information of the truth of the fact, than for accusation; it is not so much an accusation on an indictment, as an inquest of office to inquire truly how the party came to her death. You have heard the evidence touching the cause of death of the late Mrs. Henderson, and have heard my comments thereon both pro. and con. I may remark, although you are bound to pay due respect to the proceedings of the Court, and definition and exposition of the law, touching the nature of the alleged offence on which is based the ground of accusation, and you are not compellable by any rule to adhere or concur in my remarks, only so far as they serve to elucidate fairly and justly the matters connected with this important inquest, and the due administration of justice. It entirely rests with you to decide the cause of death in this instance, founding your verdict on the strength of the evidence produced and the circumstances and facts elicited in the investigation and connected with the case. And as you are sworn to declare, when, where, how, and after what manner the deceased Sarah Henderson came to her death, so you are also sworn to present no man through malice, hatred or ill-will, or upon any through favor, or affection, but a true verdict give according to the evidence, consequently you must be allowed without restraint or interference to approach your duty, with consciences unbiased, free, and untrammelled, and devoid of all prejudice, which may have been created from outside reports. Nothing is more important to the administration of justice, than that the Jury-men should come to the trial of those persons whose guilt or innocence they have to decide, with minds pure and unprejudiced. Your verdict should be compounded of the facts as detailed to you by the witnesses, and of the law as stated by the Court; but even in this you are not bound by any moral obligation to submit implicitly to the decision of the Court even in point of law; and at no time to exercise your otherwise discretionary power to decide according to your conciences. It would seem, however, that if a Jury are entitled, by any sort of right to canvass what is laid down to them for law by the Court, it may be done equally with regard to any Statute, and thus they would possess a power of setting at naught not only the authority of the Court, but of the Legislature also. But there are instances where Juries have abrogated to themselves the right to decide questions of law, and to render verdicts in opposition to the Court, and in some cases they might be right in thus acting, particularly when prejudice existed in the Coroner, or being ignorant of his duty made an erroneous charge, under such circumstances if they did not do so, the ends of justice might be frustrated, and the guilty escape. Look at the case of Rutherford in your own township. In that case the Jury should have rendered their verdict and required the Coroner to record it, which he was obliged to do at his peril. Because they did not do so, only for the Magistrates taking it up, the culprit might have escaped.

It must be admitted, and indeed he admits it himself, that he did commit a great moral wrong, in having undue intercourse and carnal knowledge with the girl who lived in the house, and from this unfortunate circumstance suspicion was aroused, not only in the minds of his own children, but in that of his neighbors and friends, and all this might have happened and he be innocent. As for the wrong he did the girl he has made all the reparation in his power by making her his wife. But if in order to effect his purpose he removed his first wife, the mother of his children, at the age of 58, out of the way through foul means premeditated and prematurely, for this he has not, nor can he make any amends, but stands amenable to the laws of his country. It is hard, however, to believe, that a man of his age, and of his reputation and standing in society, and after having brought up so fine a family, having educated and provided for them so well, would resort to such a heinous and desperate act to enable him to accomplish so unworthy a purpose. But if instigated by the devil it is unaccountable what desperate extremes a man may run into. I would fain hope that the prisoner is innocent of the crime with which he stands charged. But if you think the evidence, circumstances, and facts produced are not sufficiently strong, pointed, and conclusive to justify your handing him over to be dealt with by the jurisdiction and authority of a higher tribunal, you will of course acquit him. But on the other hand if you think the testimony of the witnesses (viewing it in its combined sense) strong enough to convict the prisoner or put him on his trial it is your duty to find him guilty, and the offender cannot apportion his own wrong. It is not only such acts as obviously tend to cause death that constitute murder, but also all such as may apparently endanger the life of another, and ultimately occasion his death, if wilfully and deliberately committed. I cannot avoid saying, that the circumstances connected with this investigation, as disclosed by the evidence, are unfavorable to the prisoner and some fact as elicted point to him as the principal, and this inquest being called at the suggestion of the sons children, and they being the most pointed witnesses against him. Testimony of this nature and coming from such a source, must be looked upon as doubly strong and binding. And all this evidence has been given without any apparent hard feeling against their father, nor does he appear to blame them for the course they have taken. Nor has he to our knowledge put any impediment in the way to deter them from telling all they know relative to their mother's death, on the contrary we have heard him say, using his own words, "tell all you know, and don't be afraid of me." The principle the young men have acted upon in the premises, in the abstract is correct. Which is, if their father is guilty of such an enormous crime, as to prematurely hasten there mother to the grave, that parent they so much loved and adored, because he had an inordinate and unlawful passion for another, he should be brought to justice and put his law'd. On the other hand, they assert, if he is innocent, he should be acquitted by a Jury of his countrymen, but first investigate by you, who living in the immediate neighborhood, should be most conversant with the facts.

Of all the forms in which human nature may be subdued, that by poison is the most detestable, and the least to be guarded against by foresight and manhood, in such cases, therefore, the law implies malice, even if the poison be not taken by the party marked out for destruction, and no particular enmity be shown to exist. But if the poison be administered by mistake, or laid with an innocent intent, as to destroy vermin, it will amount to homicide by misfortune merely. But as already stated, death occasioned by poisoning when the drug is administered intentionally knowing its deadly effects on human life, the crime admits of no degrees, and in such a case always implies malice. It is observed that the conduct of the party killed will not purge the offence, for the consent is merely void. He, therefore, who kills another by his desire and command, is a murderer and he who persuades another to destroy himself, which he does, is, though he be absent when the act is committed, a principal in the murder. Even if the deceased, being tired of life, had requested the medicine to be given, in order thereby to be freed from the troubles of the world. The person who administered it, although at her instigation, and knowing its power to overcome and destroy human life, would be equally guilty in the eye of the law of murder as if he had given it of his own malice aforethought. Any unlawful means, employed without warrant or excuse are sufficient to constitute murder. In fact the killing may be either by poison, striking, starving, drowning, or any of the thousand other forms of death, by which human nature may be overcome, for the means and the manner of the death are immaterial with this reservation, however, that there must be a corporal damage to the party. Nevertheless the immediate and direct right of deciding upon questions of law is instructed to the Court, while in the Jury it is at most incidental, but I trust in rendering your verdict on this investigation you will have no cause to exercise this prerogative, if prerogative it is.

Now the question is, how did Sarah Henderson come to her death? So suddenly, and from the enjoyment of a degree of apparent health. She was out with the girl when milking the cows, and in perhaps three hours afterwards was a corpse. Did she die of poison as alleged, or did she die by the visitation of God in a natural way? Many do die suddenly it is true, but she died under peculiar circumstances. The sudden tremor she was seized with while sitting in her chair, the spasms, difficulty of breathing as if suffocating, and unusual and violent contraction of the limbs, are unmistakably symptoms of poisoning by strychnine (a substance hard to detect or discover in the human system, particularly after long interment, and when the body is much decomposed, as was the case with that of the deceased, it is a vegetable substance, and not possessed with those qualities of adhesion, solidity, and preserving virtue, which mineral poisons have). Then, if poisoned in this way, by whom was it administered? was it done by Mr. Henderson, her husband? by the servant girl that lived in the house at the time? by any of her children? or by any other person? or was it taken by herself intentionally or through mistake? for it is admitted there was poison in the house for the purpose of killing rats. Now if you think that poison was given with the intention of destroying the life of the deceased, it is murder in the person who administered it, be that person whom he may, for death caused by poisoning admits no extenuation, nor are there any pshating circumstances to modify the act. It is but an individual should suffer a little inconvenience, trouble and loss, by a short imprisonment, then the public should suffer a great wrong in allowing a guilty party to escape.

At most the proceedings before the Coroner's Jury are only preliminary, not necessary for accusation, but to discover the cause of death. If you do find from the strong evidence before you that Mr Henderson should be put on his trial before a higher Court, perhaps it would be to his advantage. Then he will have a fair chance to vindicate his innocence. He will have the benefit of learned and able counsel; he will have the judgment of the Grand Inquest of the County, and if they should find a true bill, he will then have the verdict of twelve sworn and disinterested men, and he will have the benefit of the law more ably and clearly laid down by the Court than can be expected from me, and if his trial should terminate in honorable acquittal it will be more public, and carry with it greater weit and power to satisfy and tranquilize the public mind, and will more speedily remove that stigma under which he lies, and which in the first place may have been created through prejudice, and engendered by ill will. In making up your verdict you will be careful that the interests of the Crown and of society be duly respected With these remarks, gentlemen, I leave with you this serious and important matter to decide. Do it in the fear of God.

Canada and the Lancashire Distress.

The mails by the Canadian steamship Jura, which left Liverpool on the 25th ult, reached Toronto yesterday afternoon. The following article on the Canadian contributions to the Lancashire distress, reference to which was made in the telegraph summary of the Jura's news, is from the London Times of the 23rd ultimo:—

One of those practical proofs of attachment to the old country which are worth whole volumes of discussion on colonial rights and duties is now being shown in more than one province of our empire. Yesterday we recorded the opening of a subscription for the distressed Lancashire operatives among the natives of the Punjab. To-day we publish a report of a meeting held with the same object at Montreal. At the meeting no less than $8,200 was collected or promised on the spot, and a much larger sum had already been raised before the mails left. Had the contribution been less considerable in amount it would have touched the hearts of the suffering people whom it will help to feed and clothe. It is difficult to analyze the feelings which make the sympathy of friends at a distance seem doubly precious, but so it is. The duty of employers or rich neighbors, of all Englishmen who have money to spare for the necessities of others, is to manifest that gratitude for their assistance can so hardly be mingled with surprise. We must be dead, indeed, to all impulse of humanity and charity if we could count the smokeless chimneys of great manufacturing towns, or even read the stories that reach us from Lancashire, without longing to add our mite to the relief fund. But our colonies have wants and troubles of their own, and, if they are not burthened with English rates and taxes, they have comparatively little realized wealth, and are mostly engaged in a hard struggle for the means of retiring from business—perhaps, of ending their days in England. It is men of this stamp who met at the Mechanic's Exchange in Montreal and put down their names for £30 and £100 apiece, offering on certain conditions to double their subscriptions. This generosity will be deeply felt and appreciated by the hard-handed but warm-hearted spheres of Lancashire, and it will give a new zest and relish to many a homely meal to know that its cost was in part defrayed by sympathising fellow subjects living thousands of miles off. It is these deeds of kindness and evidences of fellow feeling that invest the bond of nationality with the character of a true relationship, and remind us of the old times when the State was regarded as a grander development of the family.

"It is not only the operatives, however, who will be gratified to find that they are not forgotten in North America. We are justified in drawing from the fact of this meeting being held, and in particular from the tone of the speeches there delivered, an inference favorable to an opinion is that, whatever difficulties may now and then arise in adjusting the obligations of Great Britain and her colonies, their devotion to the Crown is as real and active as our own. The Metropolitan of Montreal, amid the applause of his audience declared that Canada stood committed to the policy of England during the American war, and was bound to support her in maintaining the same dignified attitude for the future. We give the Canadians full credit for participating in this sentiment. It has been our duty, as observers and critics of passing events, to comment with some severity upon certain proceedings of the Canadian Legislature, but we have never done injustice to the loyal spirit of the Canadian people. On the contrary, we have protested against those theories which seem to recognize no other aims in colonial policy than the just apportionment of revenue and expenditure, and to resolve the value of dependencies into a balance of profit and loss. The error of such theories is twofold. In the first place, they rest on the assumption that tangible and immediate material interests are the only advantages worthy the name of interests at all. All the rest is 'prestige' or 'sentiment,' and it is taken for granted, in the second place, that prestige and sentiment are worthless abstractions. Now, the truth is that material interests in this sense—that is, such interests as an economist can deal with—are but a part of the elements which enter into any estimate, however, prosaic, of national prosperity and greatness. It is surely one of the interests of Great Britain, for instance, that her merchants should be protected and free from molestation in every quarter of the globe; yet this security, so necessary to the extension of our commerce, is derived not so much from our wealth as from our power—a power which is produced and might be increased by means very damaging to our pockets in the first instance. So, too, it is possible that the fact of our possessing an Empire upon which the sun never sets may contribute, in ways which could not be exhibited on a balance-sheet, to interests which if not material are next door to it, or the guarantees of other interests as 'material' as could be desired. Not that any one capable of discerning the moral aspects of the question would be content to submit it absolutely. Few of these ties and associations the maintenance of which is the triumph of civilized society would bear the rigorous application of such a criterion. After the first object of many of them have been satisfied, the link would be ruthlessly broken if sentiment were not allowed to perpetuate it, and the same arguments may be used to hasten the separation of colonies from the mother country would deprive life of half its solaces. It is true that the filial relation of one to the other is but a metaphor, and that it would be absurd to argue strictly from domestic analogies to the government of dependencies. But it is equally true that this object in its modern form is unique in the science of politics, and that it is mere pedantry to quote precedents from classical times or supposed laws of political development to prove that the allegiance of a colony cannot survive the sense of necessary dependence.' Burke may have been mistaken in dwelling too exclusively on what is now called the sentimental side of the question, but there was quite as much truth in his ultra-moral view of colonial policy as in the ultra-commercial view which is now too prevalent.

"We are far from saying that the citizens of Montreal, in obeying spontaneous instinct of kindness and good will, meant to illustrate any such principles as we have advocated. Their acknowledgement of them was probably unconscious, but it was not the less genuine or significant. The two chief speakers at the meeting, the Metropolitan and Mr. Rose, did not shrink from implying as much as we have expressed, and every subscriber must have felt something more than mere philantrophy in contributing. The compassion of foreigners may be excited by such a catastrophe as the earthquake of Lisbon, or the great fire at St. John's Newfoundland But it is not a convulsion of nature that has stopped the mills of Lancashire. It is the determination of the Government, backed by the conscience and good sense of the nation, to obtain from an act for which neither precedent nor powerful co-operation would be wanting, rather than incur the responsibility of a war. The Canadians are, no doubt, aware that they would be the first to suffer by a rupture with the United States, and have therefore a strong motive for adhering to England in this instance. This motive, however, is not temporary but permanent and the real independence of Canada would be in greater danger after a separation from this country than it could be in any event while she is a national dependency of Great Britain. Such a danger is far more than sentimental; it appeals to the self interest of every Canadian farmer and merchant. Our colonists have reasons for standing by us which the provincials of the Roman Empire never had or could have. The colonial system of government had no rival in the world. Cut off from Rome, Gaul might have governed itself, but cut off from Great Britain Canada, which is now practically governs itself, would be governed by the majority of a nation never much beloved by its neighbors, and now involved in civil war and bankruptcy. 'It has been said that we cannot have an empire without an emperor, and this is perhaps true if "empire" implies centralization and organized monopoly. How far our union with our colonies is from this the Canadians well know, and when they join with us in a movement of national benevolence it is because, with all their high spirit and impatience of control, they love the name and dignity of England'."

—Sixteen gentlemen now holding commissions in the Federal army—ranking from Brigader-General, down to Chaplain—are candidates for Congress, and it is said some of them are quite indignant that they cannot obtain leave of absence to go home and electioneer.

The Finance Minister.

The energy and business ability which Mr. Howland is applying to the management of the Provincial finances has already produced marked results. It is not possible, of course, by any lucky process of financiering, suddenly to extricate the Province from the embarrassment in which a long course of extravagance had involved it. This is a result which only time and persevering and skilful effort can satisfactorily produce. Mr. Howland, however, has succeeded in showing what may be achieved when the Government applies itself to a reduction of expenditure; and the success which has thus far attended his efforts points to a period when economical administration will bring the public expenditure within the limits of its ordinary income.

Mr. Galt, it may be remembered, in his last financial exposition, estimated the deficiency of the current year, in round figures, at $4,000,000. He calculated, however, that an addition of $1,000,000 would be made to the year's revenue by the measures he proposed; reducing the estimated deficiency to $3,000,000.

Mr. Howland assumed office under circumstances which forbade anything like a thorough revision of the estimates, whether in regard to revenue or expenditure. By striking off items which seemed wholly or in part superfluous, he reduced Mr. Galt's talked of deficiency to $3,000,000. By his new revenue measures he calculated upon receiving an additional million; bringing the deficiency down to $2,000,000.

The new Finance Minister has not stopped here. True, the difficulties he has been compelled to encounter have been greater than a glance at the Estimates might lead one to suppose. For, besides being called to grapple with a formidable deficiency, he has had thrust upon him expenditures undertaken by the late Government without the authority of Parliament, and for which no provision had been made. Amongst other items of this class, we may mention an advance of $60,000 on account of the Three Rivers and Arthabaska Railway, an expenditure of $47,000 on the town residence of the Governor General with smaller outlays amounting to a considerable aggregate. These Mr. Howland has been obliged to meet. By deferring and reducing expenditure, he has nevertheless succeeded in reducing the estimated deficiency from $3,000,000 to $2,000,000; and in this endeavor he has the cordial co-operation of the Premier, the Commissioner of Crown Lands, and other Members of the Government.

Large arrears also appeared in the account with the agents of the province in England. Mr. Howland has remitted $1,000,000 in reduction of these arrears; and he accompanied the last remittance with instructions that will prevent the disposal of any debentures in England, on account of the province. We believe, indeed, that he hopes to adjust the overdrawn account in England without increasing our debenture liabilities there; preferring to meet whatever monetary difficulties exist out of the resources of our own people instead of augmenting our indebtedness abroad.

So far as income is concerned, we understand that the actual increase of the customs revenue, to the 1st ult., was somewhat less than the finance Minister anticipated. The vigorous prosecution of claims in other quarters, and the collection of assets, long neglected, have brought the total income to within $400,000 of the estimate; and there is little doubt that this difference will also be removed by a continuance of these proceedings during the remainder of the year. There will be few neglected claims to enforce, or unemployed resources under Mr. Howland's management of the department.

We have said that Mr. Howland has reduced the estimated deficiency of the year to $2,000,000. It is expected that from various sources this amount will be yet further diminished to the extent of $500,000; so that we are led to suppose that the raising of a million and a half by other measures will suffice to carry the province through the financial difficulties of the year. With the view of providing this amount, we learn that the Finance Minister proposes very shortly to issue provincial Notes, payable with interest one year after date.

The measure by which it is proposed thus to meet the financial exigency is sound and eminently politic. Large amounts of capital now lie dormant in the country, which the issue of interest-bearing notes will bring into profitable use. The published returns show that the deposits in the banks, on which interest is paid, amount to not less than $9,000,000; and there are, besides, large hoards of the people, spare capital, fully sufficient to cover all the wants of the province. The Minister who shall succeed in obtaining from these sources whatever may be required to maintain provincial credit, will not only surmount an immediate difficulty, but will affirm a principle of the most importance in its application to the future of Canada.

The habit of running to England to borrow every dollar that might be needed to meet financial deficiencies, or to obtain the means of carrying on new enterprises, has been one of the most potent charges of the extravagance, the waste, and the demoralization which have been manifested in the management of our finances. Facilities for borrowing are well enough, rightly used; but a system which relies upon and tends to effect loans on every occasion, inevitably produces a disregard of those habits of economy which would save a country from bankruptcy. Canada has had painful lessons of learning the lesson thoroughly. Instead of adapting expenditure to income, we have gone on effecting loans, issuing debentures, and overdrawing our banker's account, until our credit "at home" has been stretched to the utmost and we are in danger of being obliged either to meet our obligations or to submit to whatever terms English money lenders choose to dictate. We are glad that the present Finance Minister is resolved to bring this system to an end. In due time, by a course of unflinching economy, we trust to see the government carried on on the principle which a solvent merchant applies to the conduct of his own affairs. Except on extraordinary occasions, there should be no borrowing; and when these occur, Mr. Howland's plan is the true one—to raise whatever amount is wanted amongst ourselves, and so to maintain independence of the capitalists, who, having but a scanty knowledge of our real position, too often expect one that are followed by disappointment.

For every legitimate expenditure, there is money enough in Canada. Were a loan necessary to-day, it might be obtained from our own monetary institutions with the greatest ease. But it is not wanted. All is needed is to provide for a deficiency which economical government will render temporary; and Mr. Howland evinces a appreciation at once of the spirit and resources of the Canadian people, when he bases his reliance upon the capital they themselves may furnish. Had no scheme no other merit than providing employment to capital at home, it would be commendable.—It will accomplish more: it will necessitate the persistence in economy, and will more closely identify the fortunes of the people with the conduct of their government.—Mercury.

Expectations not Realized.

(Condensed from N.Y. Tribune.)

It will not be denied that the national experience of the last sixteen months has been crowded with disappointed expectations. That of the rebellious States has been equally diversified, but more disheartening. Europe is confounded at the total failure of the numerous predictions put forth. Parties everywhere have been at fault. Events relied upon by many as certain to occur, have not been realized, while others which the press foreshadowed, have come to pass beyond the public expectation. Our anticipations of some things have been more than realized. It was everywhere seen that the blockade of the Southern ports would strip the railroads of that region of all freights and travel, and drive them to the seaboard over Northern roads. The sixteen hundred steamboats usually employed upon the Mississippi would be no longer available as carriers; their vast tonnage must come this way by rail. It was to secure a portion of this enormous Western trade that every seaboard city constructed lines of railroad tapping the Mississippi Valley. As was clearly seen at the beginning, the blockade has destroyed the business of every Southern line, while the volume of trade that crowds every Northern one exceeds all loyal expectation. Their stocks and bonds command higher prices than at any previous time, some of them exceeding those of the Government. The war strengthens these roads, while it impoverishes those at the South. Though cotton is a missing quantity, yet there is no vacuum on the lines of transportation—all are crowded to their utmost capacity. In this respect the North has been disappointed; the reality far exceeding the most sanguine expectation. Our trade with the south having wholly disappeared, it is seen that that of the West is large enough to supply its place, and that Northern seaports, which were insolently declared to be mere supplicating dependencies on Southern cotton fields, are active with business and plethoric with capital under a total dearth of cotton.

When the Rebellion took place in 1860, lines of magnificent steamers were running from Northern ports to Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, and New Orleans, a fleet of nearly fifty vessels, beside numerous sailing packets. The Mississippi swarmed with flat-boats and steamers to and from New Orleans and intermediate ports. All of this enormous traffic has long been dead, so far as the South is concerned.

Her treason was strengthened by another terrible mistake. It assumed that the North would be split into factions, and that a powerful one would even take up arms in her behalf. Her first discouraging disappointment was the discovery that this was a delusion. She was staggered by the loyalty of the mass of Democrat leaders. As they had heretofore eaten dirt at the bidding of South, so they were relied on to fight for treason itself. The stern loyalty of Douglas, Butler, Cass, and men of kindred antecedents, struck the conspiracy with dismay.—But the amazing unanimity of the entire North astounded them.

The South relied on Europe forcing the blockade, liberating the cotton crop, and pouring in supplies of all descriptions. The Capital was to be taken and occupied as their seat of government; Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York were to become the spoils of treason, because one Rebel could vanquish five Northern men. Blood was to flow in all our streets, grass was to grow in Broadway, and the wharves in every Northern city were to rot in idleness, the shipping that crowded them being swept from the ocean by Rebel privateers. Our Government was to become bankrupt, our banks and other moneyed corporations were to share the same fate, the North and West were to be split up into a dozen republics, into none of which should pestilent New England be admitted.

On the other hand this picture has its coloring of disappointed expectations for the North. We were sure of being in Richmond a year ago, but who now will venture to predict the day of its occupancy?—The Mississippi was to be speedily cleared of the rebellion, but rebellion still obstructs its navigation. The North, confessedly overpowering its numbers, wealth, and materials of war, was to be able to crush the rebellion at a blow. But the rebellion has lingered on to this time, developing a vitality of energy which it now appears were to be exhausted rather than crushed. In many of our Generals we have been sadly disappointed. We have gained great victories, which, we have been mortified to find, were not promptly followed up to decisive results. We have suffered terrible defeats, followed by long periods of most unaccountable inactivity. Our dead and wounded are inconceivably more numerous than we expected they would be. A year ago the nation was almost panic stricken at what was then the financial prospect. We have been compelled to raise an army five times greater than at first was believed would be wanted, and to contract a debt of proportionate magnitude. It was hoped that the rebellion would destroy slavery, but now we see that the end is sure. Once we feared for the Republic; now we know that it is safe.

These facts involve a world of expectations which have not been realized. It is plain that on some points we have not been sanguine. Sixteen months of active war have instructed, tamed, and sobered us. The North believes that the crisis has passed, that the worst is over; and men who a year ago were timid and impatient, are now confiding and courageous, content to wait in settled calmness for the happy end which their judgment assures them is already begun. If other expectations have been disappointed, this at least seems safe beyond contingency.

THURSDAY OCTOBER 16, 1862.

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

The subject of a Railway connecting Canada with the ocean in the winter months, has been pretty well discussed of late in the press, and like most other subjects, this has its advocates and opponents. Prominent among the latter we find the Globe, which opposes the scheme on the score of economy. It states, not without good reason, that Canada is not just now in a financial position to undertake to bear such a drain as will be made upon it for the project. Strained almost to the utmost tension by the advances made to the Grand Trunk, and the reckless expenditure of public money, by a profligate ministry, it is of the utmost importance that before any proposed additional burden be imposed, the question should be fairly discussed, and not adopted prematurely. We are of the opinion that any Government, rushing into this measure, and pledging the country to pay five-twelfths annually of the interest accruing upon the outlay of such a gigantic expenditure, before ascertaining the willingness of the country to sanction such a proceeding, would be guilty of a prostitution of the power yielded to it by the people. It is therefore not to be wondered at that rumours are rife of the resignation of members of the Government, on this question. Of course the matter has yet only been brought before the Cabinet at the late conference of the representatives of the Colonies. Nothing more than preliminaries were gone into, but the scheme as a whole was looked upon in a favorable light. It is a scheme that has long been talked of, and even cherished by both east and west,—and no doubt its present revival is attributable in a great measure to the present peculiar position of our Southern neighbours. Canada, notwithstanding all that has been said and written of late about it, is attached to England, and England is attached to Canada; and in the event of any bond between England and the United States, Canada would be the battle ground; hence the anxiety felt both at home and here, that the difficulties experienced last winter in sending forward troops, should be avoided. The proposed Railway, though doing much to develop the resources of the country through which it would pass, and aiding its commerce, would not achieve a tithe of benefit to warrant its construction.

It is looked upon by its advocates, not as a commercial necessity, but as a military one—and entirely on this ground are its advantages advocated. It has been suggested by its abettors that money spent to build this road would be more beneficial than an expenditure upon a Militia Bill, and would go a long way to dispense with outlays upon our defences.

Be this as it may, the subject is of vast importance in a national point of view, and should neither be adopted nor discarded, too hastily.

It must be borne in mind that a very general dislike to Railway schemes exits in Canada, owing to the extensive frauds perpetrated on individuals, Corporations, and the community, by the chicanery and deceit of selfish manipulators.

Many would advocate such a national measure, who are now lukewarm, but for these drawbacks.

It is likely to come before Parliament when it meets, and there is no doubt but it will then receive that attention which its importance demands.

We learn from papers from Vancouver's Island that the Hon. Malcolm Cameron has been entertained at a dinner at Victoria, and in a speech in reply to a toast, stated that having an interest in the overland route between Canada and British Columbia, he had come over purposely to inspect the capabilities and resources of the latter country, and that so far as he had seen and heard he was anything but disappointed.

The papers state that immense quantities of gold are being found by some of the miners, while large numbers are obliged to leave the mines for want of food. A gang of brigands is said to exist in the interior, which prevents the miners from sending their treasure to Victoria. Provisions are still high. We have had no recent news from our Peterborough adventurers.

A Meeting is to take place in the Town Hall on Saturday afternoon next, at the hour of 3 o'clock, to take into consideration the best means of raising assistance for the distressed operatives in Lancashire. We hope to see the meeting well attended.

In our prize list last week, of the County Agricultural Show, we omitted to insert Mr. Loch, as an exhibitor of furs; indeed they were the best lot ever offered in Peterboro, and equal to anything exhibited at the Provincial Show at Toronto. A typographical error occurred in the number of entries. It should have been 600 in place of 100.

Montreal Murder.—The trial in the case of the soldier, John Mawn, for the murder of Sergeant Quinn, of the 16th regiment, was concluded in the Court of Queen's Bench, at Montreal, on Friday last. The prisoner has been found guilty, and is to be executed on Friday, the 31st of this month.

We publish to-day the last of the series of letters from our correspondent "R." Our readers, we have no doubt, have been pleased with his "Notes by the Wayside," and regret that they have been brought to a close. We hope that his visit to his native land will be beneficial every way to him, and that he may yet favor us with more productions from his pen. His correspondence has been very acceptable to us.

Correction.—The charge made by the Correspondent of the Ottawa Citizen some time ago, of very improper expressions being used by the Premier at the Eastern Division nomination, we are pleased to inform the Cornwall Freeholder is false. They were used by a person of the same name, but not the Hon. gentleman.

Last week matters were crowded out that should have appeared, and the same happens to-day. We have a letter from the Deputy Superintendent of Education, which we regret at being obliged to postpone. We have one, also, from Mr. Orde which was handed to too late for this week's issue.

☞ We understand the Peterborough Amateur Dramatic Company, intend giving a performance in Peterborough, about the beginning of next month, for the benefit of the distressed Lancashire operatives.

Fire.—Some wicked person, or persons unknown, set fire to the Verandah around the Town Hall, on Wednesday morning last, between the hours of two and three o'clock. Fortunately it was discovered in time, or else our Town Hall would have been burned to the ground.

Prize Apples.—Mr. F. Stoddart will please accept our thanks for a basket of his prize apples, which he so kindly presented us with.

There is a pear tree in Salem, Massachusetts, 224 years old, which has yielded 14 bushels of fruit this season.

Gold is quoted, in New York, at 129½.

NOTES BY THE WAY-SIDE.

LETTER No. 14.

THE CLYDE.

Steamers leave the Broomielaw at Glasgow nearly every five minutes during the forenoon of each week day, for the different ports on the Clyde and the Lochs of the West Highlands.

For the distance of a mile or so we sail slowly between the rows of shipping which line the sides of the River, and after we pass these we hear on all hands the incessant

"Clank of hammers closing rivets up."

As we had occasion to observe in our letter from Glasgow, many of the largest ocean steamers afloat, and the great iron-plated ships of the British navy Black Prince and Warrior, were built on this River.

Two miles down the River we pass the Village of Govan, which was, in the 16th century, classed one of the first villages of Scotland, but, strange to say, it has never exceeded those dimensions, and from present appearance the overspreading march of the City of Glasgow will soon obliterate the separate existence of the village altogether.

Renfrew, a small Town about two miles further on, is remarkable as being the place which gives the title of Baron to the Prince of Wales. The barony of Renfrew was the first possession of the Stuart family in Scotland, and the plains adjoining have been the scenes of many desperate combats.

Proceeding on our way downward, the River greatly widens before us, and the Kilpatrick Hills appear in view. Soon we pass the Village of Kilpatrick, famed as the birth-place of Ireland's patron saint, St. Patrick. The hills spreading away to the right form a view of surpassing splendour and beauty. Next we pass Bowling Bay, near which is the mouth of the Great Junction Canal, which unites the east and west coasts of Scotland, by means of the Friths of Forth and Clyde.

Further on we pass a monument to the memory of the introducer of steam navigation on the Clyde, Henry Bell. It is thought that the great Roman wall of Antonium terminated in this neighborhood.

But we soon approach the Rock of Dumbarton, by far the most prominent object on the Clyde. The rock stands 560 feet above the level of the sea, measures a mile in circumference at its base, and is said to be an impregnable fortress. History tells us that previous to his being sent to England, Wallace was confined here. In a Room in the Rock are shown a sword of immense size, and other things said to have been the property of the mighty soldier.—At the union of England and Scotland this was one of the four fortresses stipulated to be kept up, and accordingly it is occupied by a garrison. It is a singular circumstance that on the top of the rock, so high above earth and sea, there is a spring of clear, fresh water.

Gently wending its way along the western side of the Dumbarton Rock, is the River Leven, sung by Roderick Random, as

"By Leven's Banks, where free to rove
And tune the joyful pipe to love."

Close by is the Castle of Newark, and on the opposite shore is romantically situated the ancient Castle of Cardross.

We shortly pass the village of Port-Glasgow, and reach the populous sea-port town of Greenock. There are a greater number of sugar refineries here than in any other place in Britain, and consequently it is the chief port for the importation of molasses. In the Shaws-water Cotton Spinning Factory here is the largest water wheel ever built, measuring 73 feet in diameter. Engineering and ship-building are carried on extensively, most of the steamers of the Cunard Company having been built here. The population is probably over 100,000.

The river at this point is several miles wide, and on the opposite shore is the beautiful sea-bathing Village of Helensburgh. As we continue on our course we pass almost innumerable pretty little villas, and coves by the sea-side,—used by the Glasgowegians as summer resorts and bathing-places. One of the most frequented of these is Rothesay, Isle of Bute, whence thousands of seekers after health and pleasure, flock annually. There is a mineral spring on the Island, the waters of which are said to contain miraculous curative qualities.

But if we sail along the south side of the coast after we leave Greenock, we pass the Cloch Light-house, one of the most important beacons on the Clyde. On this also, as on the other side, the coast is studded with beautiful little villas. Weymss Bay, Largs, and Millport, are all favorite places. Ayr and Ardrossan, with the Isle of Arran on the opposite side, may be said to terminate our view of the Clyde.

THE WEST HIGHLANDS.

A favorite route is to leave Glasgow by train for Balloch, and from thence proceed by steamer through the unrivalled scenery of Loch Lomond. On the right towers up towards the skies the hill of Ben Lomond, famed in Scottish song and legend. The view is described as enchanting when

"The sun has gone down o'er the lofty Ben Lomond
And left a dark cloud to preside o'er the scene."

A short stage journey overland brings us to the village of Arrochar, at the head of Loch Long. A small rivulet or "burn" here divides the shores of Dumbarton and Argyle, and it is said that in bye-gone days disputatious parties were accustomed to settle their quarrels by standing on opposite sides of the stream (that is, in separate shires,) with a judge or umpire in the shallow water between. As we sail down Loch Long we see the hills rising gradually from the water to a height of, in many places, several hundreds of feet. A remarkable thing is seen in the small streams that trickle down the mountains' sides; at a distance they appear to be long sheets of ice, but on approaching them the singular appearance of the water is seen to be caused by its being beaten into foam in its steep and rapid descent. About half-way down to the Clyde we pass the mouth of Loch Goil,

"That dark and stormy water," and we see the spot famed in Campbell's poem of "A Chieftain to the Highlands bound," as the place where Lord Ullan stood when

"Come back, come back, he cried in grief,
Across this stormy water,
And I'll forgive your Highland Chief,
My daughter! Oh, my daughter!"

Another favorite route to the West Highlands is to sail by Rothesay through the Kyles of Bute, thence up Loch Fyne. The scenery by this route is grand beyond our abilities to describe it. We had occasion to visit Kames, a small fishing village on Loch Fyne, where we received from friends, a true Highland welcome. By the way, speaking of a Highland welcome we cannot forbear quoting Burns, where he says:

"When death's dark stream ferry o'er,
A day that surely shall come,
All that I ask, all that I crave,
Is just a Highland welcome."

The Gaelic language is universally spoken here and English is also spoken with remarkable accuracy, but every native seems to think with the mythical Flora Macdonald, that

"Oh, your English is so weak,
It takes the Gaelic tongue to speak,
The bitter, burning words of scorn,
That make the brave heart grue."

Kind and hospitable to strange they are always suspicious of them, and seem to possess a feeling that there is something wrong in the designs of foreigners when among them. This probably arises from an inborn belief which is inherited from past generations. Deprived of many privileges of light which the inhabitants of more favoured countries enjoy, they are superstitious in regard to many things,—but even these are last passing away. Their simple piety and pure habits of life are striking, and impress one with a feeling of reverence for the country.

As we climbed up the heather hills on a lovely morning in August, and started the moor-fowl from their nests, we thought of many readers of the Examiner, of our acquaintance, who would like to have been by our side to enjoy again the scenes of their childhood. We embarked at the village of Ten-neigh-bru-aich, for Glasgow, after a pleasant visit.

CONCLUSION OF THE NOTES BY THE WAY-SIDE.

Mr. Editor,—I must thank you for the indulgence you have extended in giving so much of your space to these rambling notes, and may I express a hope that they have contributed in some degree to the entertainment, at least, of your readers. If any errors have occurred, or if the letters have not been so well prepared as they might have been, let the circumstances under which they were written, be considered. I must again bid adieu to your readers, but remain,

Your correspondent,
R——.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

According to previous announcement the dedicating services of the Bible Christian Chapel, (River Road, Otonabee) were conducted by Mr. Eynon—the venerable founder, and much beloved father of the Bible Christians in Canada,—and by Mr. Chapple, the president of the Bible Christian Conference. At 10 o'clock a. m., and at 2 p. m. sermons were preached by Messrs. Chapple and Eynon, respectively, to densely crowded houses, and on each occasion many were compelled to congregate around the windows outside. The Church at the six o'clock service was not so crowded as on the former occasions, but tolerably well filled—Mr. Chapple conducted the evening service. After each sermon a collection was taken up for the purpose of assisting the Trustees to defray the debt in connection with the building, and the manner in which people most willingly cast in their mites is a true manifestation that the people of the neighbourhood have merited the good wishes of all in the erection of a plain, but at the same time beautiful little Chapel, wherein to offer the sacrifice of prayer to Him who is the founder thereof, and who is the giver of all good and perfect gifts.

The day following, at 2 o'clock p. m., a very successful Tea Meeting was held in a building adjacent to the Church, there being upwards of three hundred persons present, all of whom shared of the good things provided by the people of the neighbourhood, who truly merited praise for the very excellent tea provided, and the orderly manner in which business was transacted. The young ladies of the River Road—whom I consider second to none in getting up a tea—more especially deserve well merited praise for the efficient manner in which they discharged their duty, and also for the superior quality and richness of the eatables.

Tea being over, the guests repaired to the Church where addresses were delivered by Messrs. Eynon, Hogan and Chapple; Col. Haultain presiding. Mr. Gilmour's absence was much to be regretted, he having to return home in consequence of ill health. After the addresses were delivered (the Choir singing most beautifully after each address,) Mr. Colwell read the financial report of the Chapel, for a short provision to it, when it was found that only $6.69 were due on the Chapel. A collection was immediately taken up which—as Mr. Eynon has it—"cut with a broad axe the tail off the Church." The Chapel is now clear of debt, and the acre of land (gratuitously given by Mr. Neitherclut) deeded to the Trustees of the Bible Christian Church. May the Church grow in grace, and be the birth-place of many souls to God, is the earnest prayer of

Yours,
Otonabee, Oct. 14th, 1862.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Mr. Editor,—My letters are generally short, and I trust you will therefore the more readily allow me short space more, in order to defend my former note against the insolent remarks of your flippant correspondent, "Clarence." Does he mean to say that the people of Canada have no public sins to repent of, because they have no State Church among them? or that they have no reason to repent, because they have so much to be thankful for? Should not the goodness of God, so unmerited, the rather lead to a thorough reformation? And what has all this rambling rhapsody about Established Churches to do with a Public Fast for National Sins so shamelessly prevalent in this land? and especially the contempt for truth, honesty, and the sacred obligation of an oath, for which, in my judgment, the neighbouring States are now suffering, and I too justly fear, Canada will soon have to suffer. Whenever the Globe, their friend, (and I am their friend) begins with, "If we can believe McClellan," can any one deny the infidelity of the States' Government? If you wish, Mr. Editor, Church Establishments may be debated in your columns, but what has this to do with my call to a Public Fast?

But fair play, Mr. C., who are you that takes upon you to slander so many worthy men, better than yourself? I do not know Col. Prince but from your account; he must be an honourable men, since though so liberal a Catholic, he wishes the Priest to be paid for his labours as well as the Doctor. Is there any thing wrong in that? I do not know Dr. Ryerson, but he is certainly as much a citizen of this free country, and as much entitled to be a member of Parliament if he chooses, as any Lawyer in the country. The fact is, that Mr. C. is, by his own showing, both a persecutor and an infidel. He would starve any man to death under an outlawry who dares to avow himself a public servant of Jesus, and deprive him of every civil privilege; and at the same time forbid him to change his profession—a degree of persecution never attempted before by Prince, Pagan, or Papal! An Infidel like Julian the apostate, or Henry 8th, or Mr. C. if he only had the power, is the most merciless persecutor. Who wonder then that he blasphemes the cause and the advocate of Truth in the manner he does. But, thou hypocrite, in England ministers are recognised legally, and paid and honoured as the ministers of the King of Kings, by her most gracious Majesty, and her God-fearing people; and Mr. C. may make his choice in Canada, Ministers must either have justice as ministers of Christ, or they will have it as private citizens. As for this Mr. C., with all the baseness of a self-seeking demagogue, he would first murder the minister of every religion, and then spoil and insult them. This exhibition of narrow-minded bigotry only urges the more strongly the expediency of a Public Fast, which, if you please, may end in a thanksgiving. But without repentance your thanks will be despised, as was Cain's offering.

I remain, Mr. Editor, yours truly,
A True Reformer.
Peterboro', 4th Oct., 1862.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

New York, Oct. 10.—Southern papers state that yellow fever is raging fearfully at Galveston.

The Lynchburg Virginian of the 24th Sept. says: Letter was received in this city yesterday from Major-Gen. Longstreet, written on the battle field last Wednesday. He says that our forces were outnumbered, and the battle the most desperate and bloody of the war. Our loss was heavy, but he thinks that of the enemy was still greater. We held our position occupying the battle field, but Gen. Longstreet does not claim anything more.

The Suffolk, Va., correspondence of the Herald, dated 4th, has the following:—I have highly important and gratifying news from this quarter to communicate. I have before advised you that the Confederates had pushed their pickets some distance this side of the Blackwater and had grown quite bold in their meanness of this post. On Thursday evening Maj.-Gen. Peck ordered a reconnoissance in force, which was placed under command of Col. Spear of the 11th Pennsylvania. Col. Spear started upon his mission about 9 o'clock and on Friday drove in the enemy's pickets upon the main body, which was commanded by Gen. G. W. Smith. A smart skirmish ensued, in which the Colonel had one lieutenant and two sergeants wounded. He succeeded, however, in completely routing the foe and pursued him as far as Franklin on the upper side of the Blackwater. The object of the reconnoissance was fully accomplished and much valuable information gained.

The Hilton Head correspondent of the Herald, dated the 5th inst., states that an expedition of gunboats with a land force under General Brannan had captured a fort on St. John's Bluff, St. John's river, below Jacksonville. Also an infantry and cavalry camp, at which large numbers of arms were found.

On the night of the 3rd the steamtransport Boston was ordered opposite the fort to take on board all the captured guns, ammunition, &c. Most of the captured ordnance are English rifled cannon of recent manufacture, as well as the ammunition. An immense quantity of English conical shells were found as well as small arms.

At last accounts every preparation was being rapidly pushed to completion to attack another heavy battery situated on Yellow Bluff, about 8 miles further up the river. We are anxiously waiting its results. I predict, however, its speedy demolition and the early occupation of Jacksonville at an early day.

Louisville, Oct. 10.—Among the casualties at Perryville, on Wednesday, are the following:—Gen. Jackson, killed; Gen Terrill, killed; Acting Brigader-General Webster, killed; Acting Brigadier-General G. Lyttle, killed; Lieutenant-Colonel Jewell, killed; Major Campbell, of the 15th Kentucky cavalry, killed; Colonel Pope of the same regiment was wounded.

—At a recent sitting of the teachers' convention of the county of Newfoundland, held at Brighton, a purse containing $100 was presented to Edward Scarlett, Esq., superintendent of the common schools of the county. A highly complimentary address was also presented to him expressive of the teachers' appreciation of the services he had rendered the cause of education, by raising the schools in seven or eight years from a deplorable condition to a position superior to that of the schools in most of the counties of Upper Canada and inferior to none. Mr Scarlett made a feeling and appropriate reply.

EXTENSIVE DESTRUCTION OF OIL.—A terrible fire occurred at the oil wells near Oil city, Pennsylvania, on Wednesday last, by which thirty thousand barrels of oil were destroyed, besides many buildings. The loss was nearly $20,000.

FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

538 Broadway, New York.

TO parties little acquainted with the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machines the careful perusal of the Company's Circular is especially commended. This circular can be had on application. It is very specific, and will be found highly instructive, having been prepared with much care and we will abide by all statements therein made.

The following brief quotation is characteristic of the entire Circular:

"This Machine is better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in market to the frequent changes and almost endless variety of sewing required in a family; for it will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Manchester without stopping, and make every stitch perfect. Will sew from the finest gauze to the heaviest cloth, and even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed needle or tension, or making any adjustment of machine whatever."

Thus have we successfully overcome the most difficult point in the Sewing Machine art. It was no ordinary triumph. Definitely can we now say, "No other Machine company with it in this respect." Hence, have we uniformly—almost without exception—taken the highest premium, wheresoever the Machine has been properly exhibited in competition with other first class Sewing Machines. Hence it is that we are able to offer the following guarantee, viz.:

"We warrant every Machine we sell to give BETTER satisfaction than any other Sewing Machine in the market, or money refunded." We never sell a Machine on any other terms. The guarantee is as reliable as the note of any business man in the land. For more than five years have we relied upon such facts for the reputation of our Machine; and without a single travelling agent in the field, there is scarcely a neighborhood on the continent where the Machine is not favourably known. We prefer such a reputation to one based on mere "talking points," as they are technically called in the trade. Hence we make but one kind of stitch, viz. the lock-stitch, alike on both sides, requiring only one-third the thread of other kinds of stitches.

N. B.—Local Agents wanted in every county throught the West. ☞ Special inducements offered.

Poetry.

Father's Grave.

Father, father, here I linger;
Years have passed since last I came
Thus to trace, with faltering finger,
On this stone your vanished name;
That dear name—what dear lips told it
Once—that name now named by none;
But by those—how few!—who hold it.
Dear as ever your only son.

Father, father, I am yearning
That long-vanished form to see,
That face that is but returning—
Dim, as in a dream, to me;
Few the years that dear face blessed me
Ere it and my childish sight,
Father, no more to caress me;
From its coffin, calm and white.

Then but as a child I wept you;
Deeply as a child's heart can,
Hails love my child's heart kept you,
But no more than now 'tis man.
Not as much! O early pined for,
Father, o'er whose grave I bow,
See, with tears hese eyes are blind for
Those dear eyes that see me now.

Yes, that see me; oh, but dearer,
But more loved as years depart,
Has not death but drawn us nearer,
Even closer, heart to heart!
Still amid day's thoughts, night's dreaming,
I have sensed to feel you near,
Guiding, guarding, to my seeming,
Me, your child, who mourns you here.

Yes, while your dust is sleeping,
O poor soul, these lips would kiss!
You are in some far world keeping
Watch o'er those you loved in this;
Still my evil thoughts controlling,
Joying in my earthly joy,
I have felt you, grief consoling,
Warning, strengthening me, your boy.

O from empty space before me,
Father dear, that you might start!
Might now bend that dear face o'er me,
And look love into my heart!
But not to these eyes, while living,
Shall that blessed lost look come;
No more words to mine are giving,
Those loved lips for ever dumb.

Shall I not hereafter know you,
O my father, yet again!
Yes, to those eyes death shall show you
When I leave life's joy and pain;
With the bliss of those long parted,
O how cherished, O how sweet
Is the thought that then glad-hearted,
Father, father, we shall meet!

Miscellaneous.

The Story of a Disgusted Caribooite.

Victoria, V. I., July 2, 1862.

Editor Bulletin.—I arrived in this place two days ago from Cariboo, and take the earliest opportunity of informing you what I think of the mines there I would have written before, but there is no reliable express in the mines, and the cost of a single letter to Victoria was $3.

After a long and wearisome travel of nearly 600 miles—400 of which I made on foot, and for nearly 200 I packed 75 pounds of food on my back—I reached the mines, pretty well used up. The road for the greater part of the way was good, but the last 60 miles of it was through snow, from 3 to 7 feet deep, or mud and swamp up to the knees—rain, snow and frost, and everything that could make a man uncomfortable. Well, on arriving at the mines, I found only about three or four companies at work, one on Antler Creek and Williams's Creek—the great cry being too much water. Hundreds of men were lying idle, eating up what provisions they had with them, and having to pay from $1 50 to $2 a pound for a fresh supply. Men were running round offering to work for their board, and could not get work even on those terms. Many have suffered severely. Myself and companions prospected round from creek to creek for the space of over 150 miles, for ten weeks, but could not find anything that would pay us even our board—all the best portion of the creeks having claimants, and in some instances two or three companies claiming the same ground.

This was a poor chance, I thought of making a fortune in Carinoo, so with $5 left in my pocket but some jewlery that I took with me, which I could not dispose of in the mines even at its weight in gold, I started back to Victoria. My two companions, having a chance to hire out for a short time, will follow as soon as their means will allow. I should have had a hard time of it coming down with only $5 to pay the way, but fortunately at the Forks of the Quesnelle—a town about 45 miles from the mines—I met an old California friend of mine who has been in this country since 1857, and through his influence I was enabled to dispose of what articles I had with me, and pay my way down, walking at the rate of 30 miles a day for ten days in succession, and having almost to beg for a meal even though you paid for it at the rate of $1 50 per meal at the roadside houses—so little accomodation did they have about them.

Now for a description as nearly as I can give it of Cariboo. The mines lay in a district of land that is nearly surrounded by the Fraser, the river running due north from Fort Alexander to Fort George. It there takes a bend, and after running east for some distance turns south, surrounding the Cariboo—the Fraser, Thompson and Columbia rivers all heading close to each other in the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. These mines are different from any in California. There are no small gulches and ravines or dry diggings, where a man can set to work with little or no expense save a few sluice-boxes, tom or rocker. No such claims are to be found in this country. The creeks are all large streams; they almost may be for ed rivers, and must be worked, as divers are in California, with dams, flumes, wheels pumps, etc.; and when you have to pay at the rate of 25 cents a foot for lumber, and $12 a day to carpenters, you may form some idea of the cost of living at from $8 to $6 per day—the mining season only being about three months long, during which time a man must take out enough to pay all expenses up and down, the cost of working his claim, and have enough to winter on besides—and I think you will say with me that Cariboo is no country for a poor man.

Some will say "But these men who did so well last season were all poor men." It is true, they were but last year and this is very different. Last year provisions were cheaper by nearly half, and men could get credit for $200 or $300 of food, etc. This year they will not credit you for an ounce of salt.

There are some very rich claims in the Cariboo country, but they are limited and the cost of opening them is considerable; and unless a man has $1,500 or $2,000 to risk he had better stay away. The mines as already prospected are by no means general—only four or five claims on each creek paying anything big. The others scarcely pay expenses.

The climate is very disagreeable and many will curse the day they went to Cariboo, even though they may make a little pile, as the chances are that many will suffer with rheumatism and other complaints the rest of their lives, from the severities and hardships of this cursed country. It rains every day, with scarcely a single exception, and freezes every night; and in working a man must stand in snow-water all day long. Then, as most miners live in tents with the ground wet and damp around them all the time, if a man has not a constitution of iron he cannot stand it.

This is no exaggerated account from a disappointed pro-pecter, but as true as gospel, and you will hear the same before long from many a returned Californian. In two or three years from now when roads are opened and provisions cheaper, the mines may turn out something better than now, but I venture to say that every ounce of gold that comes from Cariboo this year will cost from $30 to $40 to get it, and an amount of suffering and hardship that will never be known. Election Frauds.

The following letter in reference to frauds in the township of Aldborough, in the county of Elgin, we find in the London News:

"There is a cause for everything. It may be surprising that Beecher got a majority of 69 in Aldborough at the present election, when at previous elections the Reform candidate came off triumphant Wonder will cease when the fact is known that the assessor at Aldborough, for the present year, the notorious James Cunningham, manufactured about 100 votes for Beecher.

"The clerk for the corporation of Aldborough inserted five names on the assessment roll after the Court of Revision, for be it observed, that after the assessment roll is finally adopted by the council, no more changes are to be made.

"Both officials solemnly declared that they would perform the duties devolving upon them in their respective offices faithfully and impartially, yet we find the assessor manufacturing 100 votes for Beecher in direct defiance and violation of his most solemn oath

"Every Tom, Dick and Harry he could find favorable to Beecher he assessed, so as to give him a vote.

"Col. Airey has several thousand acres in Aldborough, Mr. Beecher is his agent, and Mr. Cunningham assessed these persons, that had no land of their own, on Col. Airey's land that they might vote.

"If the rights and liberties of the electors can be tampered with by such unprincipled and the vilest factotums as the assessor and clerk of Aldborough, how are we to be protected from such fraud, villainy and injustice. Intimidation was also used, as on former occasions, to influence electors to vote for Beecher.

"The above mentioned reasons explain why Aldborough gave a majority in favor of the servile supporter of the late administration.

"It is the full determination of the electors of Aldborough that such high-handed injustice should not be allowed to pass with impunity and that the vile perpetrators shall be brought to condign punishment."

The vote polled in Aldborough was 331, out of a population at the last census of only 2325, the proportion being 18½ per cent. In Aldborough they seem to understand the electoral law to mean "universal sufferage" for the party which has the assessor.

A REMARKABLE MAN.—At a temperance meeting held not long ago in Alabama, Colonel Lemanoosky, who had been 23 years a soldier in the armies of Napoleon Bonaparte, addressed the meeting. He rose before the audience, tall, erect and vigorous, with a glow of health upon his cheek, and said: "You see before you a man 80 years old. I have fought 200 battles, have 14 wounds upon my body, have lived thirty days upon horse flesh, with the bark of trees for my bread, snow and ice for my drink, the canopy of heaven for my covering; without shoes and stockings for my feet and with only a few rags for my clothing. In the desert of Egypt I have marched for days with a burning sun on my naked head, feet blistered in the scorching sands, with eyes bloodshot, and mouth filled with dust, and with a thirst so tormenting that I have opened the veins of my arm and sucked my own blood! Do you ask how I survived these horrors? I answer that under the providence of God, I owe my preservation, my health, my vigor to this fact, that I never drank a drop of spirituous liquors in my life and continued he, "Baron Larrey, Chief of the medical staff of the French army has stated as a fact that 6,000 survivors who safely returned from Egypt, were all of them men who abstained from the use of ardent spirits."

—A fatal accident occurred at Mitchell on Monday last through the negligence of a railway passenger. Mr. Clegg, a wheat dealer, was returning from Paris by the night freight train and fearing it would not stop there ventured to jump off. He could not have acted very carefully for a safe spot, for he fell in to a cattle guard half full of water, and there he was found dead next morning, either killed by the fall or drowned and drowned. The deceased was born in England and was about fifty years of age.

Substitutes for Cotton.

The London Times of the 12th inst., has the following in city articles:—

Excitement continues to increase in the market for the various products to which attention has been turned owing to the scarcity of cotton and flax, hemp and jute have all experienced a further advance to-day. In jute the improvement has lately been extraordinary, the present quotation showing a rise of about £8 per ton, or more than twenty-five per cent upon that current a week back. The movement appears to have been greatly accelerated to-day by a statement that Messrs. Thomson & Co., of Lincsfield works, Dundee, have introduced a method for its treatment which will enable it to be spun on cotton machinery, and, in fact, to fulfil in a great degree the purposes of that staple. At the same time there are a number of other people putting forth, suggestions and claims, and a certain kind of Italian grass is spoken of as a desirable product. Should jute, however, prove really available to the extent anticipate by Messrs. Thompson, it will be likely to take the head of all other articles, owing to the great abundance in which it can be obtained. About ten or fifteen years ago it was scarcely known as an article of commerce, but the quantity now annually exported from India is though to be 70,000 or 80,000 tons. It comes principally from the eastern parts of Bengal and is very easy to cultivate. The first purpose to which it was applied on a large scale was the manufacture of gunny bags, and subsequently it has been introduced for the manufacture of cu pets, which have been used in considerable quantities in America. A year would be required before a new crop could t en be furnished to meet any possible demand.

On the following day the same writer says.—The number of applicants yesterday at the counting house of Messrs. Robinson & Fleming to inspect the samples of jute, under the patent of Thomson & Co., of Dundee, was very great. Those among them who are woolen spinners are stated generally to have expressed a decided opinion as to the value and adaptability of the material for mixing with woollen manufactures. The cotton spinners also seemed disposed to consider that it will answer very well for mixing with cotton in the manufacture of cloths, although not for use alone, as an entire substitute for cotton it is stated that the quantity of jute now afloat for London is 4,342 tons, against 5,157 at the corresponding period of last year, and to Liverpool 3,350 tons, against 1,456—so that the aggregate is also at exactly the same as at this period.

The rise on jute since the 3d inst exceeds 50 per cent.

Serious disturbance had broken out at Prossanitz, in Moravia owing to the stoppage of the cotton factories. The riot continued for three days, and were only put an end to by arrival of a regiment of hussars. Thirty of the rioters were arrested.

The same paper states that the rise on jute during the two days previous had been upward of 50 per cent. In Harper's "Cyclopedia of commerce," jute is said to resemble coarse flax, having a long fibry texture, and when dyed has a very woolly appearance. The fibre also resembles caterpillar's thread, that it is used to adulterate silk. It is soft and easily spun. But the great objections to it hitherto have been its want of strength and durability. Being nearly white in its natural state, it soon begins to change until it finally reaches a dark brown. At the same time its strength proportionately diminishes. Circumstances hasten to retard this decay, and moisture is particularly injurious to it. High pressure steam almost reel s it away, so that when sail-cloth, adultered with jute, is submitted to high pressure steam, (of only 30lbs. pressure), for four hours, mere washing afterward removes the jute. We presume that the new preparation now so much talked of in England, counteracted this tendency to decay by preserving the original qualities of the fibre. It remains to be seen how it will stand the test of actual trial.

Handsomely Declined.

The late Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, was strongly opposed to temperance, and his sideboard and tables were loaded with brandy, wine, etc.

On one occasion Rev. Mr. Perkins, of the Sons of Temperance, dined with the Bishop who poured out a glass of wine, desired him to drink with him.

"Can't do it, Bishop: 'Wine is a mocker.'"

"Take a glass of brandy, then."

"Can't do it, Bishop: 'Strong drink is raging.'"

By this time the Bishop, becoming somewhat restive and excited, remarked to Mr. Perkins:

"You'll pass the decanter to the gentleman next to you."

"No, Bishop, I can't do that: 'A Woe unto him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's jug.'"

The Recent murder at Belleville.

An inquest was held last week upon the body of the young man Taylor, whose death at the hands of one Morris Moorman, of the Township of Thurlow, has already been recordered in the columns of the Leader. The crime was committed near the railway station at Belleville. One of the witnesses, Thomas McGinnis, testified that he in company with deceased and one Luke O'Neil had gone to P. Tansey's house, near the station, and while there Moorman came along with a bottle of whisky and treated Tansey, and, after lighting his pipe, passed on his way home. Some of the party then said that Moorman had whiskey, and to follow and get some from him. Witness, O'Neil, and deceased, followed him about three acres, and called after him to stop, as they were going to his brother's house; he stopped, and when they came up they asked him for some whiskey; he refused, saying it was not his. The four were then walking abreast. The deceased, Taylor, then left the witness' side, and went round between him and Moorman, and said, "Give my friend Luke O'Neil a drink," and struck the latter, without saying a word, stabbed him in the bowels. Deceased immediately cried, "Boys, I am stabbed." Moorman ran a short distance. O'Neil threw stones at him, but they were afraid to go near him in the dark. Deceased turned round and walked a few rods, when he fell. He was carried to the Grand Trunk station, and from there taken home. To the witness' knowledge there was not a quarrel between the parties, before or then. Moorman appeared to be sober. The man Tansey testified that after Moorman left the place the deceased cried out, "Hurrah, for we have the whiskey from him," when all the parties got up and went after him. Several other witnesses were sworn and gave evidence corroborative of the above. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that deceased had came to his death from the effects of a wound inflicted by Moorman. He is now a prisoner in jail awaiting trial on the Assizes. The deceased was a quiet, harmless lad of twenty years.

Gavazzi Riots in Tralee,

A despatch from Tralee dated the 20th inst. says:—A riot took place in this town last night on the occasion of a lecture being delivered by Gavazzi, on Garibaldi and the present political style of Italy. The lecturer made some remarks on the Papal Irish Brigade, which caused the passions of some of the Roman Catholics who were present in the lecture-hall. The police assisted by civilians, proceeded to expel the disturbers, during which time the greatest commotion ensued—eggs were eminently on the walls of the lecture-room. The police having succeeded in ejecting the principal rioters, Gavazzi proceeded with his discourse. At the close of the lecture an immense mob attacked the hotel in which the lecture was delivered, breaking almost every pane of glass in the windows, and otherwise damaging the premises. The audience were afraid to venture out, as stones were flying in all directions. The police from some of the country districts were immediately summoned, also the militia; but the combined force was unable to disperse the mob, and merely sufficed to keep them from entering the hotel. At a late hour this morning the besieged audience in the hotel were enabled to leave; several persons were struck with stones, but no serious injuries inflicted. Disturbances have taken place to-day, and it is feared to-night will not pass over without a renewal of last night's disorders."

The Battle of the Hatchie.

A correspondent of the Chicago Times claims that the battle of the Hatchie, which followed that at Corinth, was a complete success for the Federal arms. The Confederates, however, made good their retreat, which movement they were accomplishing when attacked by the enemy. The loss of killed and wounded by the battle seems to have been small on both sides. The correspondent concludes his account thus:—

"In the morning our troops gathered up the fruits of their victory—four rifled howitzers, five caissons, 1,000 stand of arms, 500 small arms, and a few horses and mules. Between 400 and 500 prisoners were sent to Bolivar, where they are yet retained. After scouring the country in every direction for two days, the army returned to Bolivar.

"The enemy, scattered and broken as he has been in his attack upon Corinth and in being attacked at Hatchie River, had undoubtedly made the best of his way to Holly Springs, where the rebel prisoners report Pillow in command of about 6,000 men, most of whom are the lately exchanged prisoners.

"Gen. Rose started with his division south last night, and we already learn that he occupies Grand Junction, and that a rebel force is threatening an attack, but probably not very seriously."

DYING RICH WITH A VENGEANCE.—It is related by passengers who escaped from the wreck of the Golden Gate that a colored man named Peterson, one of the cooks belonging to the steamer, took advantage of the panic to gather up such loose change as the terror stricken passengers had abandoned in the cabin and state rooms. He succeeded in picking up sufficient coin and valuables to fill two good-sized carpet sacks, one in each hand. Peterson jumped overboard, and, in the language of our informant, "he anchored himself alongside the wreck, and didn't show his nose above water." It is believed that he died well off, in a pecuniary point of view.—San Francisco Call.

TOWN TAXES.—The collector has commenced his work, and as some misunderstanding has been created, we desire to say that the larger amount claimed in his notices is at the rate of four shillings and four pence on the pound, and includes the eighteen pence due the Government. As the Council do not intend to collect the latter amount, it will be every one's interest to have prompt payment made, be deducted. The smallest amount mentioned in the Collector's bill is the rate levied by the Sheriff to pay the Crawford debentures and other claims. The latter is at the rate of six pence in the pound.—Colborne Sun.

—London, C. W., must be a fast city. At the Assizes now sitting there no less than three seduction cases have been tried, and it is said that more are to follow. In each a verdict and heavy damages were given for the plaintiff. In the last the defendant, William Tree, was a class-leader, member of the church and superintendent of a Sunday school, and the defendant, Emanuel Dunford, "regularly attended Sunday school."

—A man in Cleveland, Ohio, who was drafted a few days since, cut off one of his large toes to incapacitate him from serving.

THURSDAY OCTOBER 23, 1862.

THE SANDYFORD PLACE MURDER.

Recent papers from Scotland bring the account of the trial and conviction of Mrs. McLaughlin for the murder of Jessie McPherson, in Glasgow, on the night of the 4th day of July last.

The rendering of the verdict of guilty against the accused woman, has produced the most intense excitement throughout Scotland, and indeed the whole of Great Britain; immense meetings have been held and monster petitions presented to the Home Secretary, praying for a respite of the sentence on the condemned woman, who was to have suffered the death penalty on the 11th inst. The Petitions set forth that the ends of justice would more likely be obtained by further investigation, than by hanging the unfortunate woman. Nevertheless the agitation on the Reform Bill has such largely signed petitions emanated from the city of Glasgow, and the intense interest taken in the case by all classes of the community, has induced the Government to order a new investigation into this most interesting case. The particulars of the case have frequently appeared in the papers, and also in our columns, but we will briefly advert to them again, in order that those of our readers who may have forgotten them, may, the better understand, the cause of the present agitation in the British mind on this case.

A person named John Fleming, an accountant, had a house in Glasgow, and a house also at Dancca, near the sea side, where his family seemed to live in the summer months. He usually left Glasgow on Friday evenings, and staid with his family till Monday morning, when he returned to Glasgow to his business. The house in Glasgow was occupied by his father, an old man who gives his age at 87, and the female servant, the unfortunate Jessie McPherson, who is stated to have been about 40 years age. He also lived here from Monday morning till Friday evening. On Friday, 4th July, Mr. Fleming left Glasgow as usual for his family residence and returned on Monday morning, bringing with him his son. His attention was first directed to the state of affairs in the house by his son saying to him, that there was no one to get dinner ready, as old Mr. Fleming had told him that Jessie had fled, not having seen her since Friday—adding that she may be dead for all he knew. This at once led Mr. John Fleming to through the house—he went first to the kitchen, found the fire out, proceeded to the servants bedroom which he found locked and the key wanting; went next to the pantry where he found a key which opened the bedroom of the servant, where he found the body of the servant lying on the floor, dead, partially naked, and presenting a horrid spectacle. His father and son were present when the body was discovered all appeared shocked at the sight. Mr. Fleming went out and called in a doctor who said she had been dead some time as the body was cold. The police shortly after came in, and as old Fleming was the only other person known to be in the house, he was at once apprehended. It was soon discovered that Mrs. McLaughlin who had formerly been a servant in the house, and who was very intimate with Jessie McPherson had been in the house on the fatal night of the 4th July, and the fact of her being seen with sundry articles of the deceased's apparel in her possession, led to the suspicion that she was implicated with the murder. It was also discovered that some plate belonging to the family of Mr. Fleming had been pawned on the Saturday afternoon following the murder, and Mrs. McLaughlin was identified as the person who pawned it. These two circumstances joined with the testimony of a woman who lodged in McLaughlin's house, of the latter being out on Friday night from 10 o'clock to Saturday morning about 9 o'clock, pointed very naturally to Mrs. McLaughlin as being implicated in the deed of blood. Preliminary examinations were held shortly after, the murder, and the testimony of several witnesses of a strong circumstantial character indicating the guilty party as Mrs. McLaughlin, old Mr. Fleming was discharged, and the former was fully committed to take her trial for the murder of Jessie McPherson.

As soon as old Mr. Fleming was discharged, Mrs. McLaughlin made a statement to her counsel giving a circumstantial account of the whole affair, in which she states that the old man was the murderer of the unfortunate woman; that she had gone to the house on the night in question at about 9 o'clock to see her old friend; found the old man had not gone to bed, but was in the kitchen where Jessie was at work. He shortly after left the kitchen, and she supposed he had gone to bed. She took out a bottle which she had brought with her, and gave Jessie a glass of rum and drank some herself. The old man soon after returned to the kitchen bringing out a bottle and pouring out a glass gave it to Mrs. McLaughlin who merely tasted it, the old man went to pour it back in the bottle, when Jessie said something tauntingly at his not offering her any; he replied that they had drank three glasses already, and that his son was not pleased at the quantity of liquor drank in the house, but added: "If you will hold your ill tongue I will give you half a pint if you will go or send for it." She replied: "I have a tongue that would frighten somebody if it were breaking loose upon them." The old man muttered something which was not understood, emptied the whiskey out of the bottle into a tumbler and gave Mr. McLaughlin the bottle and 1s. 2d. to go out and get half a "mutchkin." She went out by the back door, could not get the liquor as the shop was shut. When she returned she found the door fastened, rapped at the door, heard no one, went around to the kitchen window, saw the gas burning, but no one in, rapped at the door again, when it was opened by the old man, who said he had fastened it against "them brutes of cats." She went into the kitchen, put the money and bottle on the table, asked where Jessie was, he went as if going to seek her, Mrs. McL. followed, and in passing the laundry heard Jessie moving in the laundry, went in past the old man who seemed disposed to prevent her, she found Jessie lying on the floor with her elbow below her and her head down; the old man followed, she asked what was the matter, but Jessie was stupid and insensible. She had a wound across her brow, and her nose was cut and bleeding. Mrs. McL. raised her head, and got some water and bathed her head and face, asked the old man why he had done this to the girl, he replied: "I did not intend to hurt her, it was an accident." While the old man went out to the kitchen for the water she asked Jessie how it happened, her reply was not made out, she seemed unable to articulate; after some bathing she seemed a little better, and said she "was sore cut." Mrs. McLaughlin told the old man to go for a doctor, he refused, saying: "She would soon get better." He shortly after went to another part of the house, when Mrs. McLaughlin asked Jessie if she should go for a doctor, she said: "No, stay here beside me." After some time she seemed to come too, and was raised up and set on a chair near the bed, appeared very weak, was afterwards put into bed. The old man was busy drying up the blood marks on the floor, after which he sat on the edge of the bed in company with Mrs. McLaughlin. It was now getting near day light; the old man went to the kitchen and put on a fire. During his absence Jessie who had come too, told her friend that a week previous the old man had come tipsy, and through the night had come into her bed and had attempted to use liberties with her; she threatened to tell his son on him, but he begged of her to say nothing; offering her money if she held her peace.

For her own sake she said nothing about it to the younger Fleming, but said she was intending to go to Australia, when she would make the old rascal pay. That on that day some altercation had taken place between them, which had been renewed when (Mrs. McL.) had gone out for the liquor. That she had gone to the laundry to take off her stays, when the old man followed her and struck her with something in the face, which was the cause of the wound and the bleeding. Mrs. McLaughlin again asked the old man how he came to act so towards the girl, when he replied in a round about way, remarking it could not be helped, but he would make it all right with Jess yet—and that if she (Mrs. McL.) would not mention what she was witness to, to any one, he would make it all right with her too. Mrs. McLaughlin gave him a promise to that effect, but he would not rest satisfied till he brought down the large Bible and made her swear that she would never reveal anything that had transpired there that night. On his part he would swear if she did not disclose anything he would make her comfortable for life. In a short time Jessie began to complain of cold and stiffness, when she was taken out to the kitchen fire. Here she seemed to become worse, and Mrs. McL. feared she was going to die; was determined to go for a Doctor, she put on her things and went up stairs to go out at the front door when the old man intercepted her, and wished to know how she was first. He came down stairs and Mrs. McL. went to the door but found it locked and no key in it. She heard a noise down stairs and ran down, when she saw the old man striking Jessie with the meat cleaver. She became frightened, ran up stairs, opened the window shutters, but saw no one. The old man came to her and said if she told she would be tried for the murder as well as himself, but if she came down they could arrange it that it never should be found out. It was as much as their lives were worth if they said a word about it. He then took the body and dragged it to the laundry, and made her, Mrs. L., help him to wipe up the blood—she begged to get away but he would not allow her, told her they must make it appear the house was robbed, and gave her some clothes belonging to Jessie, and some plate which he instructed her to pawn in a fictitious name. He gave her £1 7s in money, and charged her as her own life was at stake to well to his, not to mention to say one what had passed.

This statement was read after the deliverance of the verdict by the jury. At the conclusion the Advocate Depute moved for sentence.

Lord Deas who presided on the occasion commented upon the declaration, pronounced it false, and passed the fearful sentence of death upon her.

It is in consequence of this remarkable declaration, corresponding as some of its details do with other reliable evidence given, as well as the fact that the evidence against the woman was wholly of a circumstantial character, that have led the press and the people to urge a re-opening of the case. The judge is represented as being strongly prejudiced against the prisoner, and the jury are blamed for appearing by such a hasty decision on mere circumstantial evidence as if prejudicial against her also. The case is an intensely exciting one, and new developments will be watched with interest.

A strong feeling exists that the old man is the murderer, and wherever he appears he is mobbed. Unfortunately whatever additional evidence may transpire implicating him he cannot be put on his trial for the murder, as he has been used as a Crown witness on the case.

Sin and Shame.

The records of our criminal courts, always melancholy and mournful, have sometimes a particular and startling interest. Criminal investigations naturally deal with and expose the worst side of human nature, but usually they relate to individuals who have divorced themselves from the ordinarily decent ranks of society by so persistent a course of ill-doing, that "respectability" is not shocked by the revelation of their misdeeds, and the ignominy of their conviction tinges no cheek with sympathetic shame. But occasionally criminal enquiries involve men in an unexpected manner, and reveal the existence of the foulest moral turpitude where all seemed fair and virtuous; so shocking our pre-conceived notions as almost to justify a permanent mistrust in men's outward seeming, and a special suspicion of the honesty and sincerity of those who affect ultra-goodness.

The case of "Smart versus Hay," which occupied the Court of Assize in Cornwall, on Friday last, is one of the latter class.—The plaintiff, a widow, sued the defendant for damages for the seduction of her daughter, a girl only seventeen years of age.—The wisdom of the law which allows such an action may be questioned. The relation between the violation of female purity and a certain number of dollars is not easily seen; the relative values of innocent girlhood, with its hope, its capacities and its aspirations; of parental love and parental pride, with its tenderness, fullness and universality, are not easily expressed in figures, even if those figures indicate golden guineas. Seduction is the wilful defacement of the most beautiful and the most holy thing with which the Creator has adorned the earth. It is sacrilege and impiety for which no money can atone.—True the forms of these actions do not represent the "damages" as an equivalent for innocence stained or for hearts lacerated; but the law provides no other remedy for those wronged, and inflicts no other punishment on the wrongor, than a civil action affords. The plaintiff, then, in such a case as this, ought not to be blamed for seeking a remedy which may seem to be sordid, and must be inadequate, for the law affords no other.

Such actions, however, have their uses as beacons. The defendant Hay was a teacher of youth; the head master in the public schools of this place. Girls as well as boys were entrusted to his care. The poor victim was one of his pupils. But besides this Mr. Hay was the superintendent of a Sabbath School and the leader of a Bible class. His victim was under his influence there also. But for the publicity which an action at Law ensures Mr. Hay might have continued his operations from the advantageous positions which he occupied; and the common school, the Sabbath school and the church might have continued to be made accessory to his unlawful and debasing pursuits. The investigation and the result have at least the effect of exposing the wrong and of enabling the proper parties to guard against its repetition.

The seduction, however, foul as are its principal features,—the provision of influence, the affectation of piety, the horrible union of cant and sin which it discloses,—is not the darkest feature in the case. Bad as Hay's position is, his witness, friend and cousin, William Faulkner, of Cornwall, occupies one infinitely worse. His testimony takes the case out of the ord nary category of villainy and reduces it to a sublime depth of mean and malignant wickedness.—Surely no man ever voluntarily assumed infamy greater than this that Mr. Faulkner so jauntily covers himself with. Be his testimony true or false it is infinitely disgraceful to him; and he so little appreciates this as to have poisoned the public ear by repeating the shameful narrative at the corners of the streets over and over again, before he attested it on oath in a court of justice. It is hideous to think of this man fresh from the church, with the words of prayer hardly off his tongue, within the shadow of her mother's house endeavoring to debauch the child he had hypocritically affected to protect, on her way from the sanctuary of God to her home! This part of his story is perhaps substantially true. But oh! how shameful. The poor girl, lost though she was in her blind love to Hay, says that this villain insulted her but was foiled. The rest of his story;—the girls pretended readiness with the stranger; his pursuit of her, his account of her shameless harlotry, all this is utterly incredible. None of the facts will bear investigation. That he should have seen so much, and yet not be seen himself, no one will believe, and the jury evidently rejected his story as worthless. He only succeeded in rendering himself infamous; and rather damaged than benefitted his relation's case.
